Daylight Saving Effective Sunday

Railroads Will Change Their Train Schedules—Various States Handle The Question Differently.

New York, April 23.—Daylight saving time becomes effective in New York city and many other eastern cities at 2 a. m. Sunday. Railroads were making preparations today to conform with the change.

All railroads in this region, with the exception of the Long Island, will change their train schedules, starting trains that now leave at 10 a. m. at 9 a. m., and so on. The Long Island road will set its clocks ahead, operating on daylight time.

Steamship companies, as a whole, will observe daylight saving time.

Various states handle the question of moving the clocks forward an hour differently. New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Maine, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, West Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan leave the question to cities within their border. Massachusetts and Rhode Island will both make the change state-wide. There is a law in Connecticut forbidding clocks to show any but standard time, yet some business firms in that state will accept daylight saving time. Practically all the large cities in New York state will push the clocks ahead an hour Sunday.

In Maine, only Portland and Bar Harbor observe daylight saving time. Most large cities in New Jersey will change to the daylight time.

Daylight saving time will be in effect until the last week in September.

Hawk Leases New Addition of Cigar Factory

Well Known Electrical Dealer Forced to Seek Larger Quarters Owing to Increased Business—Takes Possession May 1.

William Davis Hawk, well known electrical supply dealer of this city, has leased the new four story brick addition of the American Cigar Company on Pine Grove avenue and will take possession on May 1. Mr. Hawk will remove his office from the Advance Building and his warehouse on Wall street, combining all departments in his new quarters.

Architect Gerald W. Deitz has prepared plans for alterations that have to be made to the building to fit it for its new use, and as soon as that work is completed the work of removing to the new location will be commenced.

Mr. Hawk started in business in a small way in Kingston in 1919 when he opened an office in the Advance Building on Wall street. He spent three days of the week in selling electrical suplies and the remaining three days in packing his orders. By strict attention to business it began gradually to expand until he found it necessary to open a warehouse on Wall street to carry his stock of supplies, and at the present time he has three salesmen on the road covering the Hudson river valley and the Catskill Mountains.

Mr. Hawk specializes in wholesale electric and automobile supplies and for some time had been seeking larger quarters and finally leased the building on Pine Grove avenue where he will be able to give his trade better service. The new location is an ideal one as it is close to the bus, trolley and railroad center of the city, and will afford him better facilities for shipping his orders.

Mr. Hawk is planning to open a large show room on the first floor of the Pine Grove avenue building which will be used exclusively as a demonstration room for the various products that he will handle.

In this district he is representing the Edison Mazda lamps, the Champion spark plugs, the Albert Wahle Company residence lighting fixtures, and the Yale electric radio batteries and flashlights. He also handles the leading lines of automobile supplies, and his new plant will be used also as a supply base for the large territory covered by his salesmen.

Submits New French Proposal

Senator Smoot Denies That Any Agreement Had Been Virtually Reached on New Proposal for Settlement of French Debt.

Washington, April 23.—A fresh proposal for the settlement of France's $4,000,000,000 war debt was officially submitted to the American Debt Funding Commission today by Henri Berenger, the French Ambassador.

The new offer was set forth in a seven-page memorandum, which M. Berenger personally read to members of the commission in French and then delivered each member a copy in English.

There was no discussion of the proposal at today's meeting, the commission adjourning until tomorrow morning as soon as the ambassador had finished.

Within a few hours after the treasury session broke up, Senator Reed Smoot, (R.) of Utah, the senate's representative on the commission, denied on the floor that any agreement had been reached or that any agreement had "virtually been reached."

His denial came in reply to an assertion from Senator Harrison, (D.) of Mississippi, that a "one-man agreement" had been reached in the French debt, "as in the Italian debt." He referred to Secretary of the Treasury Mellon.

"There is no agreement," said Smoot. "Not a single member of the commission has agreed to anything. I haven't even read the proposition submitted."

Two Sentenced In County Court

Stone Ridge Motorist to Serve Jail Term—Bartender to Get Work as Cook and Pay for Damage He Caused.

In Ulster county court Thursday afternoon, Lewis Barmes of Stone Ridge was sentenced to 30 days in the county jail on his plea of guilty to driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated. His license was also suspended except for the actual taking of his daughter to and from school for the balance of the school term. Barmes, who was represented by Roscoe V. Ellsworth, was not given the alternative of a fine but a straight jail sentence was imposed by Judge Fowler.

John Gillespie, formerly of Port Ewen, charged with grand larceny second degree, in having taken a Cheviolet coupe in this city for the purpose of a joy ride, was allowed to depart with a suspended sentence on his promise to get to work at some occupation other than a bartender and repay the owner of the car for the amount of the damage done. Gillespie was engaged on Abeel street as a bartender when he took a car and went for a joy ride. He evidently was not a good driver for twice he ditched the car and finally ran off the road, damaging the car to a great extent. Before he could get the car going again he was caught by the police. John promised to get a job as cook on a tug and Judge Fowler informed him that the Cornell towing line would engage him. Arrangements had been made to have a portion of his wages deducted and applied to the repair bill each pay day. He had been in jail since March 7. A sentence in Clinton state prison at Dannemora for an indeterminate term of not less that one year and one month and not more than two years was imposed. Execution of sentence was suspended during good behavior and on his promise to make good for the damage done. He will report to Probation Officer Service and receive instructions. Also he will report to Father Leddy fo Port Ewen who will keep an eye on John and see that he makes good his promise.

Court then adjourned until Monday morning at 10 o'clock when the city jurors will return and an incompetency action will be disposed of. The remaining jurors have been excused for the term.

Something over 25 cases have been disposed of at the present term of county court, many of the cases being disposed of without a jury.

Proposed Peace Conference Off

Governor Moore Calls Off Proposed Conference of Mill Owners and Textile Workers Because Weisbord Refused to Withdraw from Hearing.

Jersey City, N. J., April 23.—Governor A. Harry Moore "called off" today the proposed peace conference between mill owners and striking textile workers scheduled to be held in Passaic, N. J., this morning.

The governor explained his action was caused by the refusal of Albert Weisbord, youthful strike organizer, to stand aside and permit actual mill workers to conduct the negotiations.

It was reported today that arrangements were being made for a spectacular demonstration by the strikers on May 1, widely celebrated in Europe by labor as May Day. In a recent address, Weisbord predicted a "one hundred per cent victory which we will celebrate on May Day."

"Weisbord is an outsider and is not interested in a real settlement of the strike," said Governor Moore, "and I must decline to have any dealings with him in this matter."

The governor said that when he had selected a committee to attempt to bring the disputing parties in the strike together over the conference table, he had stipulated that Weisbord must withdraw from participation in the scheduled meeting.

According to a statement made by Henry F. Hilfers, Secretary of the State Federation of Labor, Weisbord intended to represent the strikers at a meeting which was to have been held in Passaic today, Governor Moore declared.

"Up to last night, I had been given to understand that Weisbord had consented to eliminate himself temporarily to permit the mill owners and the peaceful committees to attempt to arrive at an understanding with the striking workers," said the governor.

Bar Lobbyists From Assembly

Lower House of Legislature Finds Them Too Numerous and Active and Will Not Permit Them on Floor Last Two Days of Session.

Albany, N. Y., April 23.—The assembly today struck out straight from the shoulder at lobbyists who have been swarming the Capitol corridors all this week.

Without a dissenting vote, the assembly adopted a resolution by Assemblyman Cuvillier, New York, Democrat, to amend the rules of the assembly so that in the future a lobbyist will not be permitted on the floor of the house during the last two days of the session.

Dozens of lobbyists representing traction and railroad interests, school teachers and prohibition forces have been more active at the 1926 session of the legislature than at any session in recent years, according to old-time members of the legislature.

"It's time that this house put a stop to the lobbyists swarming on the floor of the assembly and urging members to vote for some particular bill in which they are interested," declared Cuvillier.

"In all my experience in the legislature I have never seen the lobbyists as active or as strong as they have been this year," he said.

Good Government Is At Stake, Says Dever

Public's Welfare Ignored in Wrangle Over Prohibition—Desperate Situation When Elections Are Governed On Attitude Toward Prohibition—Independent Bureau Necessary, Avers Andrews—Vote Among Yale Undergraduates to Be Probed.

Washington, April 23.—Prohibition is slowly destroying good government in the United States, Mayor William E. Dever, of Chicago, declared today before the senate prohibition committee in a plea to congress to end the nation-wide agitation over modification of the dry laws.

The public welfare is ignored, Dever said, when wets and drys clash over prohibition without any thought for good government. The result has brought pandemonium" to public life, he added, because prohibition has become a football of politics.

Has No Remedy.

Dever declared he had no remedy for the situation bu the urged the committee to give the subject careful study.

"Who is going to win in a Chicago mayoralty campaign?" Dever demanded. "The man with the best and longest experience in public affairs? Oh, no, not at all.

"The man elected will win solely on his attitude upon prohibition. That is a desperate situation. It affects cities all over the country just as it does in Chicago. It affects our judges, our courts, our other officials all down the line. They go in and out of office on their attitude toward prohibition and their attitude will be dominated by their political prohibition.

"We can't have successful government in Chicago or in any other city or in any other place if we impose laws upon the people, which they don't want. It brings about pandemonium in public life."

Dever said he wanted "intelligent consideration" of prohibition and the "ballyhooing and blah" driven out. He was critical of Federal District Attorney Olson's claim that 5,000 stills were operating in Chicago and could be "torn out by the roots in 12 hours."

"Mr. Olson spoke thoughtlessly," said Dever. "His mind was not operating while his tongue was clamoring."

An Independent Bureau.

The dry law can never be enforced effectively until congress passes the administration's bill estbalishing an independent prohibition bureau with a director in charge, Gen. L. C. Andrews, Assistant Secretary of Treasury, told the senate prohibition committee today.

Andrews, recalled by the drys, was not questioned about his previous testimony that government sale of beer would be a material aid to law enforcement.

Call Editor of Yale News.

The editor of the Yale News will be summoned as a witness in the senate prohibition hearings, it was announced this afternoon by Julien Codman, "prosecuting attorney" for the wets, to tell of the "wet and dry vote among Yale undergraduates."

Senator Reed, Democrat, Missouri, declared the Yale News poll had shown that Prof Irving Fisher, Yale economist, gave the committee incorrect information about the attitude of Yale students on prohibition.

Will Hear Pittsburgh Editors.

Pittsburgh, April 23.—The senate prohibition committee, desiring to learn more about conditions among Pittsburgh College students, will hear the testimony of Hugh Kressland, editor of the "Panther," University of Pittsburgh monthly magazine, and Harry Sark, editor of the Pitt Weekly, it became known today.

Kressland admitted he will leave for Washington this afternoon. It is understood that Sark will go to capital early next week to testify.

BIG ADDITIONS TO NATIONAL FORESTS

Purchases of 247,067 Acres Approved by Commission Last Year.

Washington.—During the past fiscal year the National Forest Reservation commission approved for purchase 247,067 acres at an average price of $4.80 an acre as additions to the national forests, according to the annual report of the commission. The lands thus authorized for purchase consisted of 248 tracts located in ten different states.

Of the approved lands, 55,867 acres can be classed as forested or partly forested lands on which there are stands of timber containing approximately 123,000,000 board feet of merchantable timber, says the report. The remaining lands consist of 4,655 acres of abandoned farm land, arable land and grass land; 152,633 acres of recently cut-over or not yet restocked to young stands; 24,808 acres restocking to young timber either on cut-over lands or abandoned farm land on which forest conditions are being reestablished, and 9,104 acres of barren or badly burned land, on which, however, forest conditions can be re-established. The report continues:

"During the past year only two tracts were approved for purchase in the White Mountain national forest, but these contained 21,619 acres and are being acquired at an average price of $13.06 per acre. The purchase of these lands will effect much desired consolidations. They contain much valuable timber, which will add to the reserve on this forest. Of the total stand of more than 8,200 feet per acre on this land, more than half of it is soft wood, much of it being material which is suitable for the manufacture of paper stock. The acquisition of this land will bring under government control a large area of forested land located on high slopes of several mountains, most of it so situated as to have great value as protection forests.

"These lands bring the total amount of land the purchase of which has been approved on the White Mountain unit to 462,824 acres. The lands which have been acquired are, as a rule, well consolidated for administration and for protection against fire. The effectiveness of the fire control on this unit during the past year is shown by the fact that the total area of government land burned over did not exceed 326 acres. The results of the policy of the protection of cut-over lands against fire are well shown on this forest, as many badly burned areas are now restocking and give assurance of furnishing another stand of merchantable timber. Cutting of the mature timber is being conducted in such a manner as to insure a renewal of a valuable stand. The timber products which are being sold are furnishing an important part of the timber needs of New England, while the method of cutting which is employed serves to develop the full productivity of the forest.

For Allegheny Forest.

"During the past year 30,025 acres in 31 different tracts were approved for purchase on the Allegheny forest at an average price of $8.54 per acre. This brings the total area acquired and being acquired on this unit to 186,688 acres out of a total of 739,277 acres within the purchase unit. The largest tract consisted of 17,200 acres, which, however, was divided into a number of scattered units. Other less important purchases on this forest consisted of five tracts, each of which has an area of somewhat more than 1,000 acres.

"The lands being acquired on this forest consist very largely of cut-over tracts, but are well stocked to young timber, and for this reason they offer high investment potentialities. Notwithstanding occasional fires these young stands, as a rule, are of good density. They consist largely of beech, birch and maple in the northern portion of the forest, and of chestnut and oak in the southern part. The lands so far approved for purchase on this unit are still scattered. The purchase policy should be carried forward with the main objective of effecting consolidation, since government ownership is as yet confined to less than 20 per cent of the total area of the forest.

"For many years prior to their acquisition by the federal government the lands now embraced in the purchased national forests suffered severely from repeated forest fires. Some small areas, of course, escaped unscathed, but in the main the annual fire damage was very high, and in many sections the mountain woods were almost 10 per cent burned over each year. By the mountain people woods fires were quite widely held to be necessary and beneficial and were encouraged, or at least considered as entirely unavoidable and therefore to be expected each season. At the time of purchase, too, these new national forests were largely isolated, inaccessible areas, rugged and difficult in topography, and devoid of anything like adequate systems of communication and transportation to serve as a basis for a plan of protection against fire.

"Nevertheless, the forest service undertook vigorously into this most essential task of providing the new public forests the protection from fire without which not much else in the way of forestry practice could be hopefully attempted. New protective organizations were built up on each forest, lookouts established, systematic patrol initiated, roads and trails pushed into the interiors of the acquired blocks, fire tools and food caches for suppression crews located at convenient points, and telephone systems developed so that fires might be quickly reported and steps to suppress them promptly taken.

"With the areas of the forests increased by new purchases almost annually, and in the face of constant uncertainty as to the future and ultimate end of purchase work within the established areas engendered by dependence upon annual and fluctuating purchase appropriations, the task of perfecting the system of protection against fire has perhaps been unusually difficult. The objective in this task is to develop a fire-protection system which will insure that the annual acreage loss by fire will not exceed one-tenth of 1 per cent of the total area of government land under protection.

Fires of Human Origin.

"The most regrettable feature of the forest fire record in the eastern national forests is that the fires are practically all of human origin. Campers, railroads, slash burning and steam sawmills annually contribute their quota of fires, but by far the greater number are directly attributable to deliberate woods burning based sometimes upon malice but usually upon ignorance or mistaken theories as to the effect of fires upon forest and forage production.

"The co-operation of all forest users is aggressively sought with a view to a solution of the fire problem by preventing fires from starting and by promptly reporting any fire which is discovered. The degree to which such co-operation in fire protection on the part of the local people can be developed varies with the different forests, since in some regions the number of forest dwellers or near-by forest dwellers is greater than in others. Also the willingness to play an aggressive public-spirited part in fire protection varies greatly.

"A notable example of splendid co-operation is found on the Shenandoah forest in Virginia. The thrifty farmers of that region were quick to see the destruction visited upon the timbered lands annually by forest fires, and have responded admirably to the pleas of forest officers for aid and detection of forest fires. Many fires occurring near the homes of farmers are promptly detected and suppressed by the farmers and the ranger then advised. An ideal system of citizen co-operation has been built up on the Shenandoah, and this system is followed on all forests where at all possible.

"In some unprogressive regions a very difficult situation is encountered. The people living within or near the forests do not yet recognize or appreciate the beneficial effects of forest-fire prevention, and they not only do not co-operate with the protection forces but are directly responsible for the annual recurrence of numerous fires. The situation thus presented is one of extreme difficulty, but it is vigorously attacked along the line of law improvement and enforcement, coupled with a systematic campaign of public education and publicity.

"The solution of the fire problem in the purchased forests lies largely in this serious task of breaking down a local public sentiment which for generations has passively accepted or positively encouraged woods burning and of developing in its place a widespread knowledge of the need for and beneficial results of fire prevention which will translate itself into united public support of the protection idea. This calls for a well-planned, comprehensive, and sustained educational or publicity effort, and the facilities of the forest service for carrying on such a campaign should be extended to meet this need adequately."

Women Give Medals to Faithful Servants

Berlin.—"Pour le merite" medals for domestic servants who hold records for long and faithful service with one employer are now offered by the League of Patriotic Women's Clubs of Germany, which believes that household employees are just as much entitled to decorations as members of other professions.

Seventeen candidates nominated by their respective mistresses recently were summoned to the league's clubrooms here, where each received a silver medal which was pinned on by a leader of Berlin society. Among the successful candidates were maids, cooks, governesses and butlers who had served the same employers for periods ranging from ten to forty years. In addition to the medals they also received "honor letters of recommendation" intended to insure them employment if they ever lose their present positions.

Red Flag Ousts Union Jack in London Borough

London.—Bermondsey, a London borough, largely inhabited by working people, has decided to fly the Red flag over its town hall instead of the Union Jack, thus following the example of its sister borough, Battersea. The town councilors, most of whom belong to the Labor party, have decided that the new Red flag will show the arms of the borough in the upper left-hand quarter.

J. A. W. Douglas, secretary of the council, said an davenport was intended toward the Union Jack. There is a growing tendency for boroughs to fly their own flags, and as the old Union Jack was worn out, Bermondsey decided to buy a new Red flag.

Old European Race

The origin of the Basque [illegible] is unsettled. The name is applied to a peculiar race, dwelling on the slopes of the Pyrenees. They occupy the provinces of Biscay, Alava, Guipuzcoa and Navarre in Spain, and two French departments, Basses and Nauleon.

ROAD BUILDING

TELLS OF NEED FOR ROAD MONEY

With the opening of the hearing before the house roads committee on the Dowell bill authorizing federal aid appropriations on an undiminished scale for 1928 and 1929, Thomas P. Henry, president of the automobile association, declared that discontinuation of the policy of government aid for highway building would be an unwarranted breach of faith with the states and would be highly detrimental to the national welfare.

The A. A. A. spokesman particularly stressed the vital character of the government's obligation as regards road building in the western states where the nation holds title to from 20 per cent to 95 per cent of the land and which is withheld from local taxation.

"It is no part of wisdom or fairness," said Mr. Henry, "to demand that these states shall build roads within their borders to accommodate the few people of their states and the hundreds of thousands who cross them for interstate trade or pleasure. The wealthier states also have the greatest number of motorists who make use of the highways of other states."

Mr. Henry's statement was made on behalf of the 700 motor clubs affiliated with the A. A. A. and was submitted in the form of a letter addressed to Representative Cassius C. Dowell of Iowa, chairman of the roads committee, the A. A. A. executive pointing out that this was but an opening statement, as representatives of many large clubs affiliated with the national motoring body would come from every section of the country, including the Far West, to urge immediate action on the Dowell bill.

Lower Fees for Use of Roads in Seven Parks

Reductions by more than one-half in the fees charged for automobiles entering several national parks has been announced at the Interior department.

The larger parks affected include the Yellowstone National park in Wyoming where the fee is reduced from $7.50 to $3; the Yosemite National park in California, the decrease in the fee being from $5 to $2; and the Glacier National park in Montana, the reduction in the fee being from $2.50 down to $1. Others are the Crater National park in Oregon with a reduction in the fee from $2.50 to $1; the Mesa Verde National park in Colorado from $1.50 to $1; the Mt. Rainier National park in Washington from $2.50 to $1; and Sequoia National park in California from $2.50 to $1. The fee in the General Grant National park in California remains unchanged at 50 cents.

In addition new entrance fees were established for the south rim of the Grand canyon in Arizona and Zion National park in Utah. No fee has been previously charged in these parks, but the cost of increased facilities of these areas resulted in the necessity of charging small entrance fees. The fee approved for the Grand canyon is $1, and that for Zion, 50 cents.

Road Building Planned in All National Parks

A co-operative agreement has been reached by the secretaries of agriculture and interior providing for the handling of major road construction in all the national parks by the bureau of public roads of the Department of Agriculture. Increased automobile traffic, together with a decision to use the facilities of the roads bureau, rather than to form a separate organization, prompted the co-operative arrangement. Congress recently passed a law authorizing expenditure of $7,500,000 by the national park service for construction of new roads and trails to the parks. Under the arrangement the roads to be built will meet the standards laid down for approach roads to the parks and for roads forming a part of the federal aid highway system.

Towns Need Sign Boards

Suitable identification signs should be a part of every town on a main highway, because tourists have to stop for the often to ask the name of the town they are in to get their bearings. Of course this can be avoided when one happens to pass the post office of a town, but while a few wide-awake towns have advertised their community and at the same time attracted tourists where they were in search of an approximate map of the main road at either end of the town limits, a large number of our communities have neglected the practice.

Give Right of Way

Travelers should give serious consideration the right of way question. It is the right or the left. It makes no work where the scenery or pave remains the road. When the automobile or pedestrian has two or more routes on the map marked. Whether crossing a public highway or a road, it is safest and quickest to give the right of way to the boat. It a little more of courtesy and consideration on the road, combined with common sense, will save a lot of trouble sometimes.

LIGHTKEEPER'S DAUGHTER SHOWS HERSELF HEROINE

Girl Tends Light for Three Days and Nights Through to Keep Beacon Burning.

London.—A story of a girl's heroism in a lighthouse during a storm came from the Isle of Wight.

The light in St. Helen's lighthouse, near Cambridge, was kept flashing for three nights by the fourteen-year-old daughter of the lighthouse-keeper, Langdon. The girl was marooned there one recent afternoon without food, except one loaf of bread and a small piece of cake, but she carried out her father's duties valiantly.

Langdon and his wife in the afternoon rowed ashore in a rough sea to fetch food and oil to the lighthouse, says the Daily Mail. While they were ashore the sea rose in its fury, and, notwithstanding several attempts made in a lifeboat and motor boat, the father and mother were unable to return to the beacon.

Aside from anxiety for his daughter, left alone in the lighthouse with scarcely any food, Langdon worried as to whether she would realize the necessity to light the lamp, which is one of the most important along the coast. Great was his relief when punctually the light beamed and remained flashing throughout the night.

The gale raged all the next day, making vain the attempts of the lifeboat men and fishermen to take the keeper back. Again night fell, and again the light shone at the appointed hour. As time passed the anxiety of the parents deepened; they pictured the girl as hungry, and perhaps frightened and going without sleep.

They and the girl, however, were doomed to continue the ordeal, for the following day the gale was worse and passage across the three miles of raging seas was impossible.

The third night came, and again the light gleamed forth at the proper hour, as if the lighthouse-keeper himself had been there at his task. Not until five o'clock in the afternoon did the seas abate sufficiently to enable the parents to return. They reached the lighthouse in a motor boat. This was so badly buffeted by the waves that the crew did not venture to return to the mainland.

As the flash worked regularly while Mr. and Mrs. Langdon were ashore, it was evident that the girl kept awake at night and wound every four hours the clockwork apparatus which turns the light.

Aged Man Gets Patent on Automobile Headlight

After years of concentration on the problem of lighting for automobiles, Fred Appleman of Rock Island, Ill., aged eighty-three, has been granted a patent on his no-glare headlight.

Mexico Uses Radio to Instruct Indians

Mexico City.—Addresses in Aztec now take the air in Mexico, a part of education's campaign of "education by radio."

Tongues that were old when Cortez conquered this country four hundred years ago are used in the broadcasting of instructive talks in half a dozen Indian languages and dialects, for the benefit of the many natives throughout the republic who still cling to an Indian language.

The government has distributed receiving sets to Indian villages or districts from all the surrounding territory, and children there listen in the place where a local instructor in charge of the government's "mission work" converts unknown words from afar."

To Manufacture Cakes, Floods in Film Studios

New York.—Tornadoes, fires, earthquakes, floods and even war at sea are manufactured within the confines of the new Fox National studios now under construction and it is expected to open in June.

Designed to include many novel features, the plant will embrace 40 buildings and will cost approximately $1,000,000. Spanish architecture is being followed.

The studios, each occupying 9,000 square feet, will accommodate an average amount of production work.

Announcing The Grand Opening of Kingston's New Grant Store!

Bringing to Kingston the same Economy Service now given by Grants in 80 cities—Big Buying Power, Efficient Business Methods make Low Prices Possible.

Come to Grant's Saturday—Come and See—Come and Save!

Policy of Service Back of Growth Of Grant Chain

Only an undisputed record of service and efficient management can account for the growth of the W. T. Grant Co. from one small, undercapitalized store to nearly 80 great stores in twenty years. The new Kingston store which opens Saturday morning at 307 Wall street is but the latest step in a growth which has placed the W. T. Grant Co. in the position of one of America's fundamental merchandizing institutions.

The story of this romance of American business life begins in 1906 when W. T. Grant, a buyer in a department store in Salem, Mass., conceived the idea of a department store carrying only those necessary, self supporting items which his experience had taught him were the foundations of the store. With his own savings and the investment of some friends, less than $10,000 in all, he opened his first store in Lynn, Mass.

It was a small beginning. Grant made most of his own fixtures. He bought his own merchandise, received it, unpacked it, trimmed his own windows, wrote his own signs, kept his own books, did most of his own selling. Work, work, work—fifteen to eighteen hours a day. Down to New York with an empty trunk, back on the next train with his purchase in the trunks!

"It isn't moral to work so hard," a friend told him, but he couldn't hear.

The store was a success, so great a success that his friends urged Grant to expand into a chain. Additional capital was procured and a second store opened, this time in Waterbury, Conn. This, too, was a success and it was decided to go on with the chain.

Ideas of Service which Mr. Grant had were never changed—a fair profit for the company, fair wages to the employes, and fair prices to the public. Policies have changed, the price limit was increased to One Dollar during the war, new schemes of layout and equipment were introduced, but always after consideration of the effect on the fairness to the three groups concerned.

Today the company has 80 stores, Kingston making the eighty-first. It has branched out into 27 different states, serves a population of over 26,000,000 and last year did a business exceeding thirty-One million dollars.

W. T. Grant has shared his success. The men who cast their lots with him at the start are now vice presidents and directors of the company. Mr. Grant himself has become chairman of the Board of Directors. Other men starting at the bottom have reached positions of trust, responsibility and remuneration as executives, department heads and branch managers. With but few exceptions the executive positions have all been filled by men trained in the small positions in Grant stores.

Grant's is the largest retailer of low priced high grade yard goods in America.—the enormous buying power of 80 stores makes this possible—You save on every purchase

Meeting the Need For Real Economy In Everyday Items

Kingston's new W. T. Grant Co. 25c, 50c and $1 Department Store which opens Saturday morning at 307 Wall street is modern merchandising's answer to the need for Real Economy in every day items. Grant's brings to Kingston hundreds of items needed and used every day by every member of the family at New Low Prices.

Back of Kingston's New Economy Store are twenty years of experience in lower-than-the-average selling. The success of the W. T. Grant Co. is proven by one of the most remarkable growths in the history of American Merchandising. Grant buyers buy for 80 great stores, a yearly total of over thirty million dollars. This huge purchasing power results in obtaining quantity prices and manufacturers' concessions which no individual store, no matter how successful, can obtain.

Kingston's new store is operated on the most successful modern business principles. Selling only for cash. Grant's buys for cash and takes liberal cash discounts, which amounts to huge savings. Selling only for cash. Grant's has no expensive bookkeeping system to maintain, no bad accounts to be charged against other merchandise, no credit system to be carried at heavy interest charges. These all result in huge saving which Grant customers receive.

Like all Grant's stores Kingston's new store operates on the principle of rapid turnover at small unit profit. A relatively small investment in stocks is turned many times a year, resulting in the store always being able to offer fresh, new merchandise while selling for prices which mean large savings to you.

Other savings are achieved through Grant's methods. Buying direct from the mills and manufacturers the profits of wholesalers and jobbers are eliminated. In many instances the cost of manufacturers' sales forces are also done away with.

All these savings, each one small, but making an astonishingly huge aggregate, are passed on to the customers in Kingston's new store and all other stores of the Grant chain.

WHAT GRANT SELLS.

The immense array of needed articles of always dependable quality sold in Grant's store within the established price limit of One Dollar is always a revelation to those meeting Grant's Real Economy Values for the first time. With the exception of heavy outer clothing it is possible and practicable to clothe the entire family at Grant's with no item costing more than One Dollar. Accessories for your car, equipment for your kitchen, tools for your home, garage or shop.

Elmore Chosen to Represent Ulster

New Paltz Man Will Attend National Council, Boy Scouts of America, as Representative of Ulster County Council.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the National Council, Boy Scouts of America, will be held in Washington, April 30-May 1. Lieutenant-General Sir Robert S. S. Baden Powell of London, founder of the British Boy Scout Association and "Chief Scout of the World" will be the guest of the Boy Scouts of America. The veteran scout will participate in the meeting of the National Council and later he will visit several large scout centers where mammoth rallies will be held in honor of the distinguished guest. President Coolidge is honorary president of the Boy Scouts of America. He will participate in the annual meeting and will address the convention on the evening of May 1st. The auditorium of the Daughters of the American Revolution building, which seats 1,900 people, has been engaged for that evening.

E. C. Elmore of New Paltz has been chosen as member of the National Council representing the Ulster County Council.

Supreme Court Justice James C. Cropsey of Brooklyn has issued an interesting statement regarding the value of the Boy Scouts of America.

Judge Cropsey probably has to deal with a greater number of criminals annually than any other judge in the country. It is due to the fact that the greatest number convicted and sentenced for crime are youths, that Judge Cropsey has taken the active interest in the Boy Scouts which he holds. He is president of the Brooklyn Council, Boy Scouts of America, and spends much of his time, thought and energy in the direction of the council. He was particularly active in a recent successful campaign for $50,000 for the 1926 budget of the council. During this campaign, Judge Cropsey made the pertinent statement that during 1925 of all criminals sentenced, 38 per cent were boys under 21 and 60 per cent were under 25; not one of whom had ever been in the ranks of the Boy Scouts. The Boy Scout organization deserves commendation and more active interest on the part of everyone in Ulster county.

BLOOD TRANSFUSION KNOWN TO ANCIENTS

Records Show It Was Practiced Centuries Ago.

The ancients have a way of bobbing up from their graves and presenting their claims to have originated some supposedly modern method or invention. The comparatively new method of introducing some drugs directly into the blood stream by injection or even the principle of blood transfusion, for that matter, had their origin far back, centuries before even the most advanced scientist suspected the existence of the circulation of the blood.

Those were the days of hopes, when men dreamed of the wonders of things to come, according to Dr. W. F. Dutton, former chief of the Polyclinic hospital, Philadelphia.

"Transfusion of blood and the idea of injecting drugs directly into the veins," said Doctor Dutton, "had their scientific origin in the Seventeenth century. But for many hundreds of years before that the idea of transferring blood from human being or animal to the veins of a human suffering from loss of blood or afflicted with disease had been present in the minds of those who carried on the medical tradition.

Several centuries before Harvey discovered the phenomenon of the circulation of the blood there is in Villari's "Life of Savonarola" an account of the unsuccessful attempt made by a "Jew" doctor to prolong the life of Pope Innocent VIII by means of transfusion.

"The account reads:

"'[illegible] the blood of the [illegible] was passed into [illegible] probably from the patient's veins, but no effect was noticed, the pope was not saved.'

"On the twenty-fifth of April, 1492, William Harvey began lecturing to his London classes concerning his discovery of the circulation of the blood. Two years later in a book published at Frankfort, 1615, Andreas Libavius, writing of transfusion, said: 'Let there be a young man, for instance, full of spirituous blood, and also an old man, thin, emaciated, the strength exhausted, hardly able to retain his own soul. Let the performer of the operation have two silver tubes fitting into each other. Let him open an artery of the young man and fit into it one of the tubes, fastening it in. Let him immediately after open the artery of the old man and put the other tube into it, and then, the two tubes being joined together, the hot and spirituous blood of the young man will pour into the old one as if it were from the fountain of youth.'

"In 1628 Giovanni Colle of Padua, writing of diets and drugs valuable in prolonging life, mentions transfusion and suggests the imbuing of medicaments with the inflowed blood, thus offering a suggestion of possible intravenous medication. English, German, French and Italian scientists took up the work, but it was finally discarded as one of the curiosities of medical history.

"More ancient than transfusion is the art of bloodletting. Without doubt it is one of the oldest therapeutic measures, and of such antiquity that we are unable to trace it."

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

by Mary Graham Bonner

FIND "MOTHER" FENWICK

Everyone now joined in the hunt for Mother Fenwick who had "changed places" with her children and was now a child. They even sent out a searching party. After having played so beautifully at the party, and after having been complimented by everyone so that her parents were very proud of her and even admitted before her that she had a beautiful touch, they could not understand how or why she had disappeared.

"My Darling Child," Cried Parent Sally.

It grew quite dark. Still she could not be found. "We'll have to go back for flashlights and torches," Parent Robert said in a sad voice. They were becoming more worried every second. How dreadful it was when children could not be found and when they stayed out after dark.

Somewhere in Parent Robert's memory he thought he had once felt very disgusted with his parents because they had become so frantic about him when he had been perfectly safe—only very late in getting home.

How could a parent help but worry when no one knew where a child was? It was impossible not to worry. This was just too dreadful. Mother Fenwick not to be found and darkness over everything.

They hurried back to the Fenwick house for lights, and as they went in the house they saw wet, muddy, foot tracks leading up to the back stairs.

There, in her room, they found Mother Fenwick, hastily changing into dry clothes.

"My darling child," cried Parent Sally, "where have you been? Don't you know you've worried us? We've all been out hunting for you everywhere. Where did you go? Where have you been?"

Parent Sally had said that if only she found her darling little Mother Fenwick, she would never again scold her, not so long as she lived.

It was as well that Mother Fenwick had never heard Parent Sally say this, or she would have said that Parent Sally's memory was so short it couldn't be measured.

Parent Sally was thinking hard now about what sort of a punishment she could give Mother Fenwick. She was really too old to be made to stand in a corner or to go to bed without any supper.

She would think up a good punishment. She must think up a good punishment.

Mother Fenwick had been showing too great a tendency to tom-boyishness of late. It was all very well within reason.

But now she had gone off after the piano playing was over to play with some children who lived down by the mill. They were little mothers and daddies with whom the parents did not want their children to play.

Hand Over Hand.

Mother Fenwick had had a beautiful time. She had crossed the underneath part of the bridge, hand over hand.

It had been something she had been trying to do for weeks. Her arms had ached so that before she had quite reached dry ground she had let herself down and had fallen into the marsh, so she had become wet and muddy.

But she had succeeded in what she had undertaken, and she had been thought strong and unusually athletic by the roughest of rough children.

Why in the world did parents worry when you didn't come right home? No harm could happen to you. How fussy and nervous parents were. They had better all take more nervous tonic, so they wouldn't have nerves. It was a tonic they had thought up themselves.

Yes, Parent Sally must think up a good punishment. But she couldn't just now think up anything more than having Mother Fenwick practice an hour more every day for a month.

They would have to think up something more later on. For the time being this would have to do.

It was really a hard job thinking up punishments.

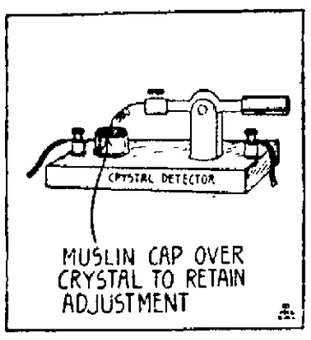
RETAINING CRYSTAL ADJUSTMENT

Simple Method Effective on Sensitive Minerals.

F. M. Russell.



The average listener who is satisfied with short distance reception generally uses a crystal receiver of some description. The average set of this type requires a very delicate adjustment of the crystal in order to obtain maximum sensitivity. The slightest vibration, such as a jar, or a person walking across the room upsets this delicate adjustment and a new sensitive spot must again be located after some delay.

This annoying condition can be satisfactorily dealt with by securing a small piece of muslin cloth and drawing it tightly across the surface of the crystal. The crystal can then be brought into adjustment in the usual way, the whisker penetrating the fine mesh of the muslin which prevents the contact from being thrown out of adjustment.

Crystals can usually be re-sensitized by placing them in an alum solution which has been dissolved in water. The crystal should be placed in the solution for about fifteen or twenty minutes and then removed. When completely dry it is again ready for use. Never let a crystal come in contact with your fingers.

Nutty Natural History

By HUGH HUTTON.

THE ROCKBOUND BUNNY.

Quite a number of these interesting little creatures have been observed cavorting around the stern of the stern and rockbound coast of Massachusetts. In spite of the fact that Longfellow made the assertion that the coast had a stern, it was not generally believed until an investigator from the American Museum of Natty Natural History discovered it a year ago, and at the same time caught his first sight of the bunnies. Like the Puritans who first landed there, they frequently acquire a slight ban from drinking the water in the vicinity of the rum fleet off shore, and around the holidays become very bunny.

The large ears of the bunny are split almond kernels, and are always in an alert position to catch the sound of more rum fleets coming toward shore. A large single peanut answers for the head, an ordinary pecan for the body, and a rice grain for the nose. The feet and legs are cloves and lima beans, and the tail is a popped popcorn.

150 YEARS AGO

The Origin of the U. S. A.

By Jonathan A. Rawson, Jr.

DRAYTON SAYS WE ARE FREE.

Charleston, S. C., April 24, 1776.—Chief Justice William Henry Drayton delivered from the bench today, in a charge to the grand jury, an address which in effect asserts that America is even now free from all political attachment to Great Britain. He gives it as his opinion that George III, by the law of the land and by his disregard of American rights has "abdicated the government" of South Carolina; and that with respect to that colony the throne has become vacant and its people no longer owe obedience to the King.

Coming as a judicial opinion in a formal sitting of the court, Justice Drayton's speech created a great sensation. In a minute's time it established the revolutionary movement, hitherto called by its enemies a lawless uprising, as a legal procedure indorsed by sound constitutional principles, said the Justice.

"The Almighty created America, to be independent of Britain. Let us be aware of the impiety of being backward to act as instruments in the Almighty hand, now extended to accomplish his purpose; and, by the completion of which alone, America in the nature of human affairs, can be secure against the craft and insidious designs of her enemies; who, think her prosperity and power already by far too great. In a word, our piety and political safety are so blending, that to pursue our labours in this divine work, is to refuse to be a great—a free—a pious—and a happy people.

"And now, having left the important alternative, political happiness or wretchedness—under God, in a great degree, in your own hands; I pray the Supreme Arbiter of the affairs of men, so to direct your judgment, as, that you may act agreeable to what seems to be his will, revealed in his miraculous works in behalf of America, bleeding at the Altar of Liberty."

THE GENERAL URGES UNION.

Philadelphia, April 23, 1776.—Colonel Joseph Reed, lately a member of General Washington's military staff has received from General Washington an urgent appeal for a stronger union of the colonies. The General says:

"I am exceedingly concerned to hear of the divisions and parties which prevail with you, and in the southern colonies, on the score of independence. These are the shelves we have to avoid, or our bark will be split and unable to pieces. Here lies our great danger, and I almost tremble when I think of this rock. Nothing but disunion can hurt our cause."

Whale Long Pursued

Whale fishing is a far more ancient calling than most people know. Primitive man's first acquaintance with the creature was probably gained from stranded specimens; exactly when the first boat put to sea in pursuit of one of the monsters history does not record. But King Alfred's description of Othere's voyage to the White sea is an indication that the Norwegians were expert at whaling a thousand years ago. The Basques of certain Pyrenean districts carried on a lucrative trade in whale oil in the Tenth century; they were fearless hunters of the black, or Atlantic, whale.

Luncheon Clubs Old

The modern luncheon clubs such as the Rotary, Kiwanis, and Knights of the Round Table, do not typify a new idea, according to records. Luncheon clubs were well established in Addison's day when the "Spectator's Club" flourished under rules that include: "None shall be admitted into the club that is of the same trade with any member of it; if any member swears or curses, his neighbor may give him a kick in the shins and if any member tells stories that are not true he shall forfeit for every third lie a half-penny."

Popular Fairy Tales

"Grimm's Fairy Tales," including Tom Thumb, Hans and Gretel, the Frog Prince, Rumpelstiltskin and hundreds of others, are actually folk tales of Germany which were collected from the peasants and compiled in the first half of the Nineteenth century by two brothers, professors at the University of Berlin. Jacob Grimm was born at Hanau, January 4, 1785, and his brother, Wilhelm, February 24, 1786.

New Glens Falls Hotel Opens May 4

Somewhat Larger Than the Governor Clinton, It Was Built by Same Firm and Will be Operated by American Chain.

Glens Falls, N. Y., is planning a three-day celebration to mark the opening of a new community hotel, built with funds subscribed by citizens at a cost of $700,000, and to be known as The Queensbury. The hotel will be operated by the American Hotels Corporation as part of a system of twenty-three hotels in the Eastern part of the country. With the Governor Clinton at Kingston, and the Hendrick Hudson at Troy, both of which will be opened within a few weeks, the company will have six hotels in New York state alone.

The Queensbury gets its name from the fact that the original grant of land in 1762 where Glens Falls now stands was named after the young Queen Charlotte, who was married to George III, about a year before the grant was issued.

The promoters of The Queensbury, remembering this ancient lineage of Glens Falls, very appropriately adopted the Colonial style for the architecture of the hotel and for the furnishings and decorations. The structure is five stories high and is built of red brick with stone trimmings. With its 151 guestrooms, spacious dining room, banquet hall, lounge and other assemblage places, The Queensbury will give exceptional accommodations to visitors.

The main banquet will be held on Thursday night, May 6th, when speakers of prominence will be present.

One of the striking features of the hotel decorations is a painting by Griffith Baily Coale which will hang in the main lobby. Mr. Coale, who has achieved fame for his murals, has chosen for his subect the cave in Glens Falls, which was immortalized by James Fennimore Cooper in his novel, "The Last of the Mohicans." It is a striking composition, showing the scout holding aloft a blazing pine knot in the dim recesses of the cave, while at the entrance are grouped a number of the characters made famous by Cooper in his series of historic novels, including, of course, the inevitable Red Skin chief. The painting is 13 feet 6 inches by 10 feet 6 inches.

The J. G. White Engineering Company of New York were the architects and contractors of the hotel, with W. H. Everell in charge, and the financing was arranged under the supervision of the Hockenbury system of Harrisburg, Penn. The decorations and furnishings were in charge of W. & J. Sloane, represented by E. J. Tudor.

The officers of the Glens Falls Hotel Corporation and the directors of the hotel are:

George F. Bayle, president; Frank Brown, Egbert W. West, Frank M. Brown, treasurer. The directors are: George F. Bayle, James McPhillips, Benjamin F. McCreery, Louis M. Brown, Egbert W. West, Frank M. Smalley, Fred W. Wiley, Maurice Hoopes, Daniel H. Cowles, George Tait.

Cheap

They had not been married very long and so it is not very strange that until this day they had never had a quarrel.

However, now they had had their first little tiff and she turned to him with tears in her eyes.

"Well, John," she said, "even though I have been extravagant I got a bargain today."

"Yes?" he replied. "I'll bet it was a bargain! You have no idea of the value of money. I suppose you think you got something for nothing?"

Her eyes gleamed for a moment.

"Yes, dear," she said sweetly, "I got a Christmas present for you."

"Coins" Made of Ice

A French electricity undertaking was convinced that one of its consumers was obtaining electricity for nothing through a franc-in-the-slot meter, but inspectors could not discover how the electricity had been obtained.

In despair, the consumer was offered a monetary reward, when he confessed that he had frozen water in molds to the diameter and weight of the coin normally used. After a short time in the meter the ice melted and left no trace.

Early Locomotives

The first successful locomotive made in America, the "Best Friend," was built at West Point foundry, Cold Spring, N. Y., and given its first trial about ninety-five years ago, says the Chicago Journal.

During the previous year Peter Cooper, the American philanthropist, had constructed a locomotive at his iron works near Baltimore. This was called the "Tom Thumb," and was tried on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, but was too small for any practical use. A locomotive was imported from England in 1829 and served as a model for the American builders, although it was itself a failure.

Sick Cows Are Not Profitable

Even Though Loss Immediately Following T. B. Test May be Heavy, Healthy Cows Pay Best in the End.

The following from the State Department of Farms and Markets is of interest to dairymen as well as to consumers of milk:

When the farmer is confronted with the question of T. B. testing his herd, he naturally turns to the T. B. Committee for information. No sane man is going to subject his herd to the test unless he can see the economic side as well as the health side. In the following article we will try to set forth the high points of both sides.

Under modern conditions bovine tuberculosis has ceased to be merely a problem of the dairy farmer. It has grown in scope until it has forced itself upon the attention of statesmen and economists. Boards of Health in every city in this great country are forced to consider the problem when plans are made to protect and safeguard the public health of the nation. If the problem were simply one of the farm all these outside forces would not be brought to bear on it as is the case.

Careful inquiry into the course and final outcome of human tuberculosis shows that the disease is not irrevocably fatal when patients are properly treated and cared for and when such a treatment is undertaken and faithfully continued before the damage has become too extensive.

It is not improbable that the same results would be obtainable in bovine T. B. if there were no other considerations than the mere saving of lives or restoration to a bearable state of health. However, cattle tuberculosis is first of all a matter in which the items of profit and loss are dominant. The cow must be a producer of profit, without which it has no reason for existence; thus the length of its productive life is far too short to make good any outlay of time and money, such as would be required to restore a tuberculosis animal to a sound one even if this could be done at all. The cost of isolating such infected animals would be prohibitive and without such precaution there would be a great chance that the disease would spread to other cows so that the process of saving one animal would necessitate its repetition in a dozen others. Furthermore, any sort of treatment to be successful must be started when the disease is in an incipient stage.

Treatment, is therefore, for practical and very obvious reasons not to be thought of as a means of solving the bovine tuberculosis problem. Under ordinary conditions of dairying the disease will pursue its natural course and slowly but surely reduce the cow to a state of non-productivity until some morning she is found dead in her tie-up.

With the present low percentage of infection it is not unlikely that losses due to tuberculosis could be borne quite easily by the dairymen if two additional factors did not enter in to disturb things. The first of these is the matter of increasing infection, as the cow population increases so will the infection increase, not only in actual number of infected animals but also in percentage of them. The tremendous spread of the disease in Europe, where infection is now estimated to be from three to ten times as heavy as our, bears this statement out. Hence it become readily evident that unless measures are concerted at once to stamp the disease out of existence that it will sooner or later reach such proportions as to menace the entire cattle business.

A second consideration is that of public health. Figures taken from hospital records of tuberculosis cases in many large cities in this country show the startling fact that from twenty to twenty-five per cent of all cases of T. B. in infants under five years are of the bovine form. Surely no dairyman in his right mind would care to know that sick animals in his herd were producing milk so poisonous as to infect helpless infants, yet such is the case as it stands today.

Another source of loss and danger lies in the meat industry. Records of Federal Meat Inspection show that in 1918 over 242,000 carcasses were retained or condemned as unfit for human food. This figure has since increased by nearly half as much again until the total is nearly 400,000 carcasses. These rejected carcasses represent a tax or farmers of nearly forty millions of dollars annually. County losses in money from cattle turned off are estimated at between $50,000 and $60,000 annually, due to the fact that dealers realize that a large proportion of the cattle they purchase are apt to be tanked for fertilizer rather than be resold as bologna stock. Thus the diseases takes two possible profits from the local farmer. First, it cuts down the number of years that he can hope to milk each cow, and second, it reduces the resale price of his turn-off. The prevailing low prices on bologna or skinner cattle that are sold in this country are due solely to the fact that because of local disease conditions the risk of purchase is abnormally large.

From these figures it would seem to be evident that most farmers lose more in money each year on tubercular animals, without making any progress whatsoever in the way of helping themselves out of the difficulty, than it would cost them to test and replace with larger, better and healthier animals. How long such conditions are to persist is up to the farmer himself. If he desires to stop this enormous loss it is within his power to do so by taking advantage of the state money now available for cleaning up tuberculosis.

Insects Delay Own Birth

Observations made by a British scientist has led to the belief that if the weather is bad the small egg moth can postpone its own birthday for days, months or years. The cocoon of this type is ordinarily due to open in February, but if the weather is inclement the birth is usually postponed sometimes for 12 months. Moths have been known to emerge successfully after being imprisoned 11 years.

Contagious in That Sense

"Now, sir," said the professor of medicine, "tell me to what class of maladies insomnia belongs?" "Why—er," replied the medical student, "it's a contagious disease." "I never heard it so described. Where did you learn of this?" "From experience. Whenever my neighbor's dog can't sleep, I'm just as wakeful as he is."

Fishes' Sense of Smell

To determine whether fish have a sense of smell, carp were blindfolded at the zoological institute at the University of Munich, in Germany. It was found that the fish refused to eat bits of meat boiled to extract every trace of odor, but when a similar piece of meat was sweetened the carp snapped it up greedily.

The Cardigan Jacket Is Among Those Present This Season and French Women Are So Imbued With Sports Ideas That Heels Have Lowered.

The Riviera season, with its great interest in tennis and its influx of

A Jumper of Knitted Jade Wool Featuring a Shell Pattern in Buff, Introduces Collar, Cuffs and Chemisier Panel of Matching Green Jersey, the Latter Material Also Making the Side Pleated Skirt.

American sports lovers has done much to stimulate all things appropriate for sports wear. The cardigan jacket and several types of sweaters have been enthusiastically revived. So keen is interest in clothes of this genre that even footwear is affected. Of course, the pastel kid shoe has been presented successfully for resorts but usually in dressy types. Now French women have even gone to the extreme of lowering their heels, wearing shoes which are decidedly more sportive in spirit. Reptilian effects deserve first mention, especially when the skins are introduced either on or for the hat, in a belt or handbag.

Fashionables are entirely in the habit of matching up accessories even though they have lost their first zest for ensembles. It is more accurate perhaps to say that the term ensemble is having a wider interpretation, and that the return of the two-piece suit has for the moment eclipsed the glory of the ensemble suit which features a longer coat.

Every woman who has occasion to dress for out-of-town includes a sweater again in her week end bag. What matter if they are referred to as jumpers so long as they contribute warmth of color and a desirable degree of warmth in the literal sense. Having a gilet of matching or contrasting color but a contrasting weave is a novel touch. One finds too that silk or wool knitted or crocheted collars and cuffs are an effective addition to a crepe de chine or balbriggan sports dress.

Improving on Nature

The production of synthetic camphor from turpentine oil in this country appears to be an accomplished fact. Exact details are not known, but from one to three tons a day have been quoted as estimates of the production.

The camphor industry until recent years has been a monopoly of the Japanese, who have continually increased the price of the natural product and have thus forced European consumers to manufacture camphor synthetically. Such manufacture is indeed satisfactory, especially as it has spread to Britain on a fairly large scale.

Hint of Summertime in Winsome Horsehair Hat

A delicious hint of summertime is given in a white horsehair hat with very wide brim, slightly drooping, and high square crown. It has one large pink feather rose with leaves and long stem fastened across the front of the crown. This hat was made to wear with a simple white crepe de chine gown at Palm Beach. One of the same sort is pale yellow straw with a cluster of jonquils and stiff slender leaves painted directly on the front of the crown. A large, loosely arranged cluster of roses in delicate pink and tea shades is painted with fine lines of gilt on a hat of pale pink horsehair, touched off quaintly with a narrow black velvet ribbon circling the crown. Some dainty, dressy hats of tulle and lace are among the French novelties. One dashing model is in black chantilly lace frilled and wired to stand erect around a crown of silver tissue. This is worn with a frock of silver gray taffeta with a shoulder cape of black chantilly finely plaited.

Variety Marks Popular Two-Piece Jumper Frock

Each week brings further proof that the ingenuity and cleverness of designers in creating new versions of the popular two-piece jumper frock have not been exhausted. So generally becoming are these costumes and so youthful and smart that it will probably be some time before they pass out of the fashion picture.

Among the latest models to be brought out are those fashioned of shantung or rajah silks. They are on an equality and come in such a wide range of colors that they are adapted both to street frocks and to the colorful models designed for sports and country wear.

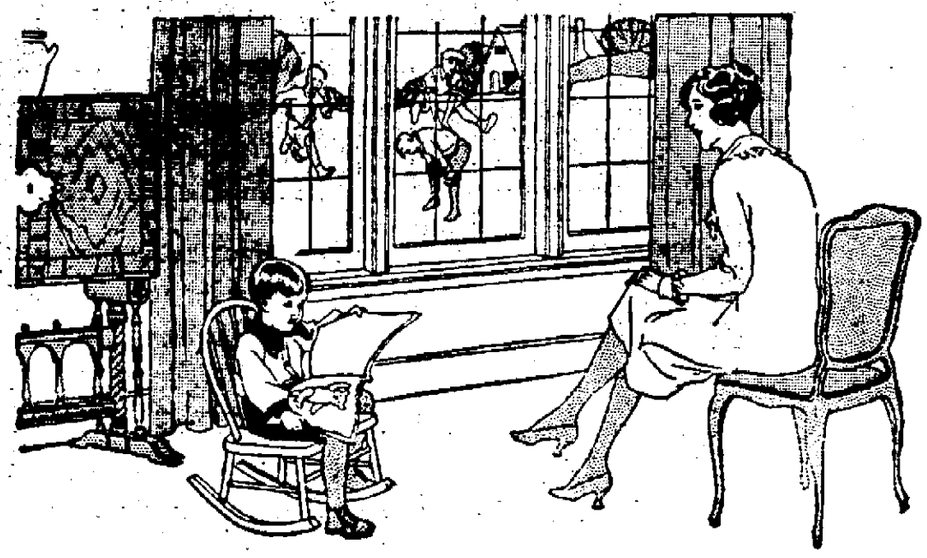
Taffeta also has found its way into the realm of the jumper dress and is used for several of the most attractive models shown this season.

Black and White

Black and white continue to form an effective alliance, especially as they appeared in a new version, which consisted of a frock of white taffeta flounced with black lace and sashed with coral velvet ribbon tied in an enormous bow on one hip.

HAVE THEY ENERGY

to run and race . . . back and forth . . . in and out . . . here and there . . . all day long?



Give them ample amounts of GOOD LUCK . . . a pure, tasteful energy food . . . in every meal

EXERCISE is the natural thing with children, and is one sign of normal good health. All healthy children are active . . . bubbling over with life and energy. Parents should view with concern any relaxation from the normal standard of healthy activity.

Correct diet has much to do with healthy activity. The properly fed child is active. Include plenty of fat food in the diet, for this is the natural energy food that supplies vim and vitality.

Jelke GOOD LUCK Margarine is the best kind of energy food. Tasteful, easily digested, nutritious, this blended fat supplies an important food element in a form easily assimilated by little bodies.

Watch your children carefully to see that they are naturally and normally active. Plan their diet to include GOOD LUCK. Serve as a spread for bread both at regular meals and lunches. Be sure this part of their menu is well represented. Then healthy energy naturally follows.

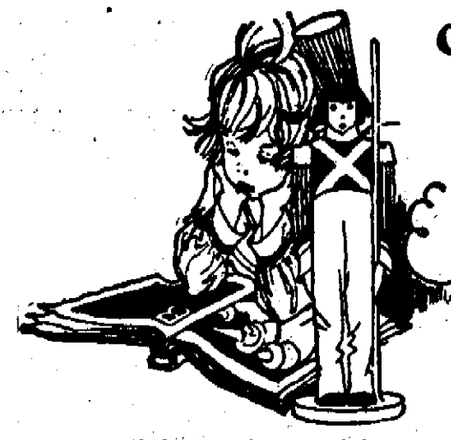
How many mothers realize this?

A large insurance company in New York has found that of all the deaths of the nation, over one-third occur below the age of six.

"Children's" diseases are dangerous. Most of them, however, can be prevented by good hygiene and nourishing meals that increase resistance to disease germs during the growth years.

73 child health writers agree that mothers may help their growing children develop a high degree of resistance to child illnesses



THIS is the time of the year, the dreaded last few months of winter, when mothers everywhere are fighting bravely to bring the children through with a minimum of child illnesses.

Authorities say that mothers should first of all know why child illnesses are more prevalent among children during the early growth years.

According to the works of 73 child health specialists, child meals at this time often do not include an adequate amount of the growth foods.

As a result, although apparently well-nourished, the actual vitality of some children is low and child illnesses always develop more readily when the body and its tissues are weakened.

Next to protection from contagion, itself, the best defence is nourishing food, particularly those foods which contain growth and health-promoting essentials like Mother's Oats and milk.

One cup of each of these two foods alone furnishes 23% or nearly one-fourth of the growing child's daily requirement of protein, the one most important substance in food for the building of the tissue out of which the body itself is formed.

Then the indispensable vitamins and growth-promoting minerals which you have heard so much about—all are present in Mother's Oats with milk.

What a wonderful store of helpful things in one delicious breakfast dish!

The careful millers of Mother's Oats have been working for more than 50 years to make this one brand of breakfast oats the most appealing in flavor and the most nourishing for growing children.

It is made from natural whole grains that possess just the things that children need most during the growth years—vitamins, minerals, a tender covering of bran, and other food values.

Glove Silk Lingerie Is on Spring Fashion Card

Glove silk lingerie has weighed its way to the fore. The new spring models cover every type and style of garment desired, from the simply tailored sets to the very lacy ones for evening.

A two-piece set consisting of a step-in and vest is very practical. It has two new features; the fitted waistband on the step-in and the fitted effect of the bodice part of the vest, eliminating the necessity for a drawstring. The new waistband is about three inches in width. It permits the garment to fit snugly about the hips. It is also made to button either at the hips or in front, and its fullness is achieved by tiny pleats or deep shirrings stitched in a smock-like fashion. Vests with their fitted bodices and fancy-cut tops are worn outside the step-ins.

Military or tailored sets have, for decoration, bindings of the same silk in contrasting colors. These also have the fitted tops and are cut very deep under the arms. Another set has hemstitched ruffles, with colored pipings to finish the step-ins and the vest, thereby carrying out the idea of a molded figure. For evening sets, lace insertions and dyed net are quite extensively used. In these garments the fitted bodice top is very effective. The low-cut front and back in the "V" shape are seen. White and all the pastel shades of lavender, flesh, peach, green and maize are used.

Pajamas, sleeveless affairs, are of dainty silk, satin or other materials, decorated with dainty hand-embroidery in either the same or of a contrasting color.

For basic slenderness choose a costume slip with slim lines. Select a radium batiste or glove silk or silk jersey, whatever you prefer. Also make a shadow hem. Ribbon straps are used, also a piece of wide lace insertion as yoke and above hem of the skirt. Dainty embroidery decorates the center front.

N. Y. Girls Chew Gum To Slenderize

Girls and young matrons who are beginning to "spread" no longer have to undergo starving or other inconvenient reducing methods. They can use the new plan so popular in New York society. It consists of taking a harmless medicinal ingredient, purely vegetable, discovered by science, which dissolves old fat cells and prevents new ones from forming. It contains no thyroid or dangerous drugs. This ingredient acts quickest if well chewed so it is incorporated in a delightfully flavored fat-reducing chewing gum called "Slendo." Users of society's latest method find spread all over the country and local druggists already have a supply of this gum so that our own correspondent can use Slendo to KEEP slender or GET slender.

SCHOOL DAYS

Mother's Cook Book

When happiness can be manufactured so cheaply and sell so high, and is always wanted in the market, it seems a pity that more of us do not set up in the business.—W. C. Gannet.

EASY DESSERTS

THE dessert adds the finishing touch to a good meal. It should be appropriate to the meal it follows. If a light meal, then a heartier dessert may follow, like steamed pudding, apple dumplings, pie and such desserts. Following a heavy meal, dainty dishes of sweets or fruits are best liked.

Date Pudding.

Boil together ten minutes two cupfuls of water, three-fourths of a cupful of brown sugar and three tablespoonfuls of cornstarch. Add one cupful of sliced dates. Mold in sherbet cups, garnish with chopped nuts and serve with whipped cream.

Apple Snow.

Pare and cut four apples into quarters. Cover with boiling water and cook until the apples are soft and the water almost evaporated. Cool, put through a sieve, add powdered sugar to taste and fold in an equal quantity of whipped cream. Chill before serving.

Apricot Ice.

Take four cupfuls of dried apricots, four cupfuls of water, the juice of three lemons, one-half cupful of sugar and the whites of three eggs. Soak the apricots until soft, then cook until tender. Press through a potato ricer to remove skins. Add the sugar to the pulp, then the water and cook ten minutes. Remove from the heat, cool, add lemon juice and freeze. When the mixture is partly frozen, remove the cover and stir in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Cover and finish freezing.

Date Pie.

Cook one-third of a pound of dates in two cupfuls of milk twenty minutes, strain and rub through a sieve, then add two eggs, a fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, nutmeg to flavor and sugar to taste. Bake in one crust as a custard pie.

A raisin pie is a very rich and well-liked dessert. This should follow a light meal as it is a highly nourishing dessert.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

MAKING OPPORTUNITY

WHATEVER may be the common belief about opportunity and its disinclination to knock more than once at your door, will, if you look into the matter, be found wholly untrue.

A plain, cut and dry explanation concerning the activities of opportunity disproves its alleged caprices and its unwillingness to be helpful to mankind, for it is ever ready to serve men and women, whether it knocks at their doors, or is attacked in the street, and made to stand and deliver by the mere force of a smile.

Alas! for the man who does not recognize opportunity when he meets it, which may be a dozen times a day while he is bemoaning his lot or lamenting his fate.

He flounders and pants through mazes of doubt and despair, when, if he would sit down a while and take stock of his surroundings, he would probably find that opportunity had been playing hide and seek with him all day, and wondering why he was so blind.

Tried as you may be by the squalls and cross-currents, opportunity is often sitting beside you waiting for a friendly nod, or a good, old-fashioned handshake.

It suspects your aspirations and knows your shortcomings. It knows, too, your inward resolution, your weakness, lack of faith and hope, and would at the slightest hint rush to your assistance.

"Well, when?" you may ask cynically.

"Right now," comes back the reply, "but you must do your part and play the man in doing it."

Stick a flower in the lapel of your threadbare coat, draw in your chin, puff out your breast, inhale the life-giving morning air and walk like a supercilious drill-master, and opportunity will give you a snappy salute.

Never drag your feet, wear a woe-begone expression, nor let the crowd trample you down. Never admit defeat.

Make friends with faith and cheerfulness. Pursue this course from the moment you open your eyes in the morning, and you will find before night that opportunity has been waiting for you in places you had heretofore labeled "impossible."

Opportunity is yours whenever you may elect to accept it, notwithstanding all the time-worn sayings to the contrary.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"CRESTFALLEN"

THIS is a word popularly used in common speech to indicate dejection, to describe one in a dispirited mood. The term comes to us from the parlance of the barnyard. For while the creel which gave the word its origin is correctly the upper part of the head of any bird or animal, it is associated particularly with the comb of the cock who struts unabashedly about poultry domain.

Frequenters of the barnyard know that when life goes hard with the cock his crest, which at other times protrudes proudly up into the air, is seen to fall dejectedly. This might be said, like the wagging of discipline tail on the part of the dog, to be his medium of self-expression.

The epitome of the term "crestfallen" in its figurative use for a person who is dispirited and oppressed can hardly be questioned.

Twilight League Meeting Tonight

This evening at 7:30 a meeting will be held at the city hall for the purpose of perfecting the organization of the Kingston City Twilight Baseball League. At that time the by-laws and schedule committee will report.

So far seven clubs have been given places in the league and an eighth club will be selected from among several applications. The latest addition to the league is the Kingston Post Office team which makes the seventh team.

Games will be played at the Kingston Fair Grounds week days by the Twilight League Clubs and on Sundays the Colonials will meet out of town teams. It is the plan of the management to build up the Colonials from the best material in the Twilight League and if necessary to then bring in a few extra players to strengthen up the Colonials. Every player in the Twilight League will have a chance to make the Colonial team and play in the Sunday games.

A collection will be taken up at the Twilight League games and the money deposited for distribution at the end of the season. To the winning team of the league the pennant will be awarded and each member of the team will be given a prize of a gold baseball.

A local "world's series" will be played at the end of the season between the Industrial League and the winner in the Twilight League.

The eighth club in the league will be decided upon at the meeting this evening. Teams so far entered in the league are the Junior Order United American Mechanics, American Legion, Kingston All Stars, Crescents, Knights of Columbus, D. Kantrowitz's Kolts and the Kingston Post Office team.

Managers and those interested in the league are invited to attend the meeting this evening.

The directors of the Kingston Fair Grounds, Inc., have leased for the season the baseball park to Lou Brown and Hugh McTague.

OPENING EVENT IN PENNSYLVANIA MEET

Philadelphia, April 23.—Thirty-two years ago almost to the day and hour, a small but select group of pioneers fared forth on Franklin Field and, almost in semi-privacy, ran themselves silly. When this interesting result was achieved, they called it an afternoon and the first annual University of Pennsylvania relay meet was history.

Today, the first of 500 teams and 3,000 individuals will go to the mark in the opening event of a two-day carnival that is destined to break all records in the matter of spectators and entries. Nearly 60,000 paying guests will have given the turnstiles a whirl before nightfall tomorrow.

Anyhow most of the local citizens have lashed themselves into a lather over the prospect and, in spite of the fact that no foreign entry was to be on display for the first time in recent years and that the early weather prospects called for showers, at least 15,000 spectators will view the proceedings today.

Tagging Major League Bases

A homer in the tenth inning by Todt, his second during the game, gave the Red Sox the long end of a 9-8 nightmare with the Yankees. Pat Collins also hit a homer and leads the league's sluggers with three circuit clouts. Three Yankee rookies, Thomas, McQuaid and Braxton, failed to stand the gaff, Thomas passing ten men.

Rain washed away the Cleveland-Detroit game and also washed the Indians into first place.

The Athletics suffered a relapse and lost to the Senators, 8 to 2. Reuther outpitched Harriss by several city blocks.

Hargrave, St. Louis catcher, hit two homers and his mates made five double plays, but the Browns lost to the White Sox 11 to 7.

Dazzy Vance's 1926 debut was a great success for the Giants, who sent the Brooklyn ace to the showers in the fifth frame and trounced the Dodgers 11 to 4. It was opening day for the Robins and old home week for the Giants, who collected seventeen hits.

Hafey's homer in the tenth staked the Cards to a 5 to 3 victory over the pirates. Pie Traynor, Pittsburgh third baseman, was spiked and painfully injured.

A four-run rally in the fifth enabled the Braves to beat the Phils again, 6 to 2.

The Cubs and the Reds fought an eleven-inning draw, 5 to 5. For once the reds gave Luque a lead to work on but the Cuban couldn't hold it.

RICKARD'S ACTION WILL RESULT IN BREAK

New York, April 23.—The rumble of war circulated through boxing circles today as the result of Tex Rickard's signing with Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champ, for at least one big time bout in New Jersey, but no explosion was expected, if any, until the return of Rickard to New York tomorrow morning.

The New York State Athletic Commission, with a threatened split within its ranks regarding Rickard's defiance of Commissioner James Farley's stated preference for Harry Wills as a title contender, will consult Rickard at length. Farley has announced he will not countenance a Tunney-Dempsey match and intimated dire reprisals if his wish is flouted.

William Muldoon, another commissioner of equally emphatic if less objection to a Wills-Dempsey bout. The Third Commissioner George R. Brower, declares he has an open mind on both subjects.

Heroism of Women

It is a part of the heroism of women to believe and suffer rather than to reason. Their instinct gives them their view of truth; they make their demands upon the conscious nature. It is for the man to analyze, to distinguish, to define; to give a reasoned account of the truths by which he lives.—Contemporary Review.

Moderation Key To Longevity

Chauncey M. Depew, 92 Years Old Today, Tells How to Live to be a Good Old Age.

New York, April 23.—Chauncey M. Depew, ninety-two years old today, expects to live to be 100—at least.

There's no great trick in living to a ripe old age, according to Depew who is hale and hearty and getting quite a "kick" out of life. One of the secrets is "moderation;" Depew emphasizes that—He makes it a point not to overdo anything.

Here's how to live to be a good old age, as revealed today by the vigorous "young" president of the board of directors of the New York Central Lines.

Observe moderation in all things. Keep in the middle of the road.

Think only of cheerful things, as far as possible.

Cultivate the society of young people; try to live their lives.

If certain foods disagree with you, give them up. Too much peaches and cream will make any one sick.

Be an optimist. Realize that the world is getting better, that the young folks are just as good or better than ever before, and that auto rides and petting parties are not as bad as painted.

Marry young.

Trust in God. Be convinced there is a response to prayers.

Depew, a famous after-dinner speaker, always has enjoyed a good laugh; always will, he says. Years ago he was told by the late President Garfield that he could be elected president of the United States if he gave up joking.

"I would rather tell a good joke than be president," Depew said today that he replied.

Asked what he thought of joy rides and petting parties, Depew said: "When one reaches 92 he cannot indulge in such fun sufficiently to qualify him as an expert."

Too Plucky

Clever Sencio, Filipino boxer, who fought to the finish with "Bud" Taylor at Milwaukee and died a few hours after the bout from over-exertion. Sencio is the second fighter to die after fighting "Bud," the first being Frankie Jerome.

Educated Dog

Dogs have not such good brains as monkeys. Yet from long association with man the dog has learned to make better use of his brain than the monkey, and therefore appears more intelligent.

Dogs have been taught to spell. Rolf, the Skye terrier of Mannheim, actually did sums and dictated letters, and his feats are attested by British as well as German observers.

One night Rolf woke his mistress, who lit a lamp and took the alphabet. Rolf spelt out, "Listen! Birds!" His mistress told him that what he heard was an owl hooting, and Rolf went back to bed satisfied.

GOVERNOR PINCHOT — BRIG. GEN. SHERRILL

Princess Astrid, of Sweden, is mentioned as the future bride of the Prince of Wales in continental court gossip. Daniel Willard, president of the B. and O. Railroad was elected chairman of the board of trustees of Johns Hopkins University. Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, told the Senate Judiciary Committee that his State is steadily and surely being dried up by prohibition. Brigadier-General Charles H. Sherrill sailed for Lisbon, Portugal, to represent the United States at the International Sports Committee meeting.

No king of nobility or other person can give a government which is best for the people, simply because nobody can give you what is best for you, for that which is best for you is what you work out for yourself. MISCELLANEOUS DISHES

It is possible to have wholesome food and attractive desserts made with but little time. As expense must enter into the account of 85 per cent of the American housewives' plans, it is not easy to have things good, inexpensive, easy to prepare, together with variety; but hard things are what the average housewife knows how to conquer, so she just puts a little more thought and effort into her meal planning.

Fifteen Minute Pudding.—This pudding meets all the qualifications, attractiveness, wholesomeness, easy to prepare and not too expensive: Sift one cupful of flour with one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of baking powder, then add one-half cupful of milk, mixing well. Into buttered cups drop a spoonful of the batter and over it add a tablespoonful of canned cherries—juice and all—cover with another spoonful of batter and when three or four cups are partly filled, put to cook in a pan of boiling water, having the water deep enough not to boil out, but not deep enough to boil over the cups. This makes four good-sized puddings or five or six smaller ones. Steam well covered 15 minutes and serve with cream and sugar.

With the variety of prepared gelatins on the market a dessert which may be quickly prepared and then set into the ice box is ready for the night dinner, or for the next day's luncheon. It must stand long enough to become well chilled to be satisfactory. To this jelly any kind of fresh or canned fruit may be added or served with it. With different flavors combined and molded into various forms, it will seem each time like a new dessert.

A small amount of preserves stirred into cake crumbs, flavored with two or three drops of rum extract, garnished with whipped cream, makes a quick, economical end of the meal time tasty dessert.

Makes All the Difference

Burrowing by Wombat Made Melbourne "Dry"

The wombat, in spite of its disarmingly comic name, has won itself an unsavory reputation by causing a landslide and interfering with Melbourne's water supply, according to Australian cablegrams. Burrowing wombats let loose 20,000,000 gallons of water by undermining an aqueduct.

The wombat can be easily recognised as an animal that looks like a little bear, has a pouch like a kangaroo, and can only hiss unless it has hair on its nose, in which case it can grunt. As it is only from two to three feet long in full growth, it is available as a pet.

A wombat was once noted in London. It belonged to Dante Gabriel Rossetti, who had a feud with William Morris' pet owl and stuck stanchly by his wombat. The beast, it is said, was forever getting away, and as the wombat sleeps by day and wanders at night, late pedestrians on London's gas-lighted streets sometimes got the shock of their lives.

The animal is shy and gentle, though it can bite. The hairy-nosed variety, which grunts, is found in southern Australia. There are other varieties in Tasmania and the islands of Bass straits. Some of these are shaggy, some silky and smooth. They all shuffle on short legs and live on the ground or in burrows and rock holes. None of them has a visible tail, but only a rudimentary stump hidden by the coat.

They come in brown, gray, black or yellow. The soles of their feet are full of bumps. Their teeth grow continuously, with persistent pulps, and are chisel-like, although the wombat diet is chiefly grass, roots and herbs. The creature burrows, and that is why Melbourne's taps run dry the other day.

More Than He Bargained For

Paul Montgomery went to a dance in a country town up in Iowa one night. He met a girl there who was rather easy to look at and after dancing with her several times asked if he could "see her home." She said yes. When it came time to go Paul learned she lived five miles out in the country and had ridden a bicycle to the dance. He had to walk to her house and lead the bicycle.—Capper's Weekly.

Blue-flowered catnip mint, planted in the house or barn, is an excellent safeguard against rats. By the time the plant is grown rats and mice will abandon the buildings. The flowers also make a charming border around the building.

Educated Dog

Dogs have not such good brains as monkeys. Yet from long association with man the dog has learned to make better use of his brain than the monkey, and therefore appears more intelligent.

Dogs have been taught to spell. Rolf, the Skye terrier of Mannheim, actually did sums and dictated letters, and his feats are attested by British as well as German observers.

One night Rolf woke his mistress, who lit a lamp and took the alphabet. Rolf spelt out, "Listen! Birds!" His mistress told him that what he heard was an owl hooting, and Rolf went back to bed satisfied.

CAR WITH ENTIRE INNER WORKS LIT UP.

Unusual Exhibit by Local Dealer For One Week.

Southard & Belchert, Inc., of 579 Broadway, local distributors for the Oldsmobile motor car line, have on exhibition at their salesrooms a cut-away chassis of an Oldsmobile Six. This chassis was shipped to Kingston by boat Thursday and assembled for public inspection that day. The chassis is the one used as a part of the Oldsmobile exhibits at the large eastern automobile shows during the past winter. It shows every working part of the car in actual operation. The entire engine, transmission, drive units and rear end have been cut away in portions to disclose every vital moving part of the car.

The chassis is done up in nickel trim to allow inspection of the working parts, glass covered ports cover the cut away portions. The interior of the motor and transmission is fitted with small electric lights to allow close inspection of all parts in operation. The moving parts are driven at a slow speed by means of an electric motor so that every operation is shown. Portions of the motor are cut away to show the valve operation, cooling units, crankshaft, timing gears and other units in actual operation.

The exhibit will remain at the Southard & Belchert show rooms for a week and the public is invited.

Original "Russians"

The name "Russia" is derived from the name given to the Swedish Vikings or Varangians, who constituted themselves at Novgorod and were called Ros Ruo, or Rurol. These words are Slavonic and Greek corruptions of Rodel, the name applied to the peculiar, dazzling rovers or seafarers.

England's "Golden Age"

The term is applied to the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It was a period in which patriotism assumed proportions never before attained in England. Famous explorers, such as Sir Francis Drake, Frobisher and Gilbert, set out upon adventurous quests. The navy of England swept the armada from the sea. Christopher Marlowe, Lyly, Kidd, Peele, Stern and Shakespeare were creating the so-called Elizabethan drama.

Felt for Chair Legs

Felt glued on the ends of the chair legs will prevent them from marring the polished floor. Also this simple device will do away with the scraping noise chairs generally make when moved about. There are rubber caps manufactured for this purpose, but the felt will be found easier to attach, as it can be cut to any size. Long strips also can be cut to fit the rockers of rocking chairs.

Elephants Have Colds

Circus elephants often suffer from colds and the method of treating them is more or less difficult. However, one remedy that seems helpful at least is to make the elephant inhale by using vinegar, which is done by half filling a bag with vinegar and hanging it over the elephant's trunk so that it has to inhale the fumes whether it wants to or not. The fumes are held to be quite beneficial.

BARTLETT PEAR IS NOW THE STANDARD

The Bartlett was a good Christian pear before it came to America. In fact, that was its original name, but in France, however, "Bon Chretien." The Bartlett pear is now the standard of peardom, the universally used fruit for eating out of hand, but especially fine for culinary purposes and used from a market standpoint almost to the exclusion of other varieties. California is a great producing center, and cans for the world its supply of Bartletts, found in every big hotel around the globe.

The Bartlett, or, as it was then known, the "Bon Chretien," girdled the United States much as they now lay transcontinental telegraph and telephone cables. It started at each coast and met somewhere in the middle states. The original Bon Chretien pears, originals of the Bartletts, came in with the New England colonists, and now flourish over the eastern states and stretch westward. About the same time the Spanish friars in Mexico were growing Bon Chretien pears, they moved up into California, where they became a popular and staple diet in that wonder of fruit-growing communities, and moved eastward so that Bartlett pears moved the width of the country.

Further south other pears to some extent supplant the Bartlett, being better adapted to the climate, but for the eastern, western and middle states it is the pear par excellence. It became the parent of other pears which have attained favor, notably the Kieffer, which runs the Bartlett second in popular favor, this pear being originated in a cross between the Bartlett and the sand pear by Peter Kieffer of Pennsylvania.

When the term "pear shaped" is used, it refers to the typical contour of the Bartlett or old Bon Chretien pear, which is more regular in outline and quite different from other types of pear, which are more angular, longer necked, or rounder. The Bartlett is surpassed in flavor for eating out of hand by some other varieties, connoisseurs claim, but for general all-around usefulness it is still the oldest and the most popular.

Wintering Raspberries by Covering the Plant

Raspberries may be laid down in cold climates and kept through severe winters by following the suggestions below: For tender varieties the bushes may be tipped over—roots and all—and covered. Late in the fall dig the earth away six inches deep from under the roots, using a long-handled, round-pointed shovel. Then with a four or six-tined fork push against the plant about a foot above the ground, using the foot against the roots, and lay the entire plant over. Then cover the whole plant with earth or coarse hay or straw. If the variety is tender cover two or three inches deep, using earth mostly. Hardy varieties in severe climates may be protected by throwing a few shovelfuls of earth on top of the canes, thus allowing the snow to fill in amongst the tops. If late spring frosts are likely to occur, do not raise the raspberry plants until late in the spring; otherwise they may be replaced in the former position early in the spring. Some growers bend the canes over and cover with earth and trash without digging, but in any event care should be taken not to crack or split the canes.

War on Prairie Dogs

The Department of Agriculture says that less than a dozen live prairie dogs could be found in Niobrara county, Wyo., over an area that had been almost solid prairie dog towns for a stretch of 20 miles in one direction and 46 miles in the other. Extensive and unremitting warfare has been waged in this section against this small but exceedingly destructive pest, with the result that today native hay has been cut from land formerly riddled with prairie dog mounds, and fine fields of alfalfa have been grown on land which was a worthless prairie dog colony only a few years ago.

King's Speech Seldom Great State Document

As a rule little attempt is made to prepare a "king's speech" which can be called a great state document. In the last conservative government before the war there was a speech on one occasion which had been so much maltreated in the process of revision that the clerk to the council apologized to the lord chancellor for the form in which it was sent up to him for reading in the house of lords. "Oh," said the lord chancellor, cheerfully, "I don't mind. You see, I generally get one version of the speech from the lord president and another from the prime minister, and they rarely agree. But I don't worry, because the papers get their copy from some third source, which differs from either of the others!"

Lloyd George, in Paris, gayly canceled the draft prepared by his colleagues and had a substitute prepared under his own eye. This, when pruned of some "flamboyance," was quite a remarkable effort, though it was finally passed only a quarter of an hour before the council met. At the other end of the scale might be placed a later speech, the clumsiness of which so annoyed Lord Balfour that he devoted a morning in bed to the production of something a little more grammatical.

Speeches from the throne were usual and intermittent pleasures until James I introduced the practice of making a personal explanation of his reasons for summoning parliament. At the opening of the first parliament held after his accession in 1604, the new monarch, always fond of hearing his own voice, treated lords and commons to a long and well-informed speech, which was well received and gained him a somewhat fulsome compliment from his lord chancellor. Being expected to follow on his majesty's oration, Lord Ellesmere, apparently overcome with emotion, said: "A Lacedemonian, being once invited to hear one that could imitate the nightingale very well, replied, 'I have heard the nightingale itself.' And why should you be troubled with croaking of a chancellor that have heard the powerful expression of a most eloquent king?"—Manchester Guardian.

Misplaced Joking

The week's prize father and son story is told of an observance in Birmingham, attended by the best families and sons of that community. Everything went beautifully at the banquet and the dramatic festivities that followed. But the fireworks started when the boys and fathers repaired to the smoking rooms after the ladies were gone to look for their wraps. There they found them. The [illegible] of the more or less irate fathers should be taught that probably the most inappropriate time to indulge in practical joking is at the father-and-son banquet.—Washington Star.

Dolls That Help Doctors

Among people accustomed by Moslem rules, including the seclusion of women, a doctor's diagnosis of his female patients is an easy task and most necessarily be open to considerable doubt.

A small ivory or metal figure of a woman is passed through a curtain, writes Prof. F. J. Libersohn in the book, "In the Heart of Asia." The patient then hands the figure back indicating the spot where she feels the guilt and the doctor diagnoses accordingly. A unique method provided he prescribes the right medicine.

LAST NIGHT on THE RADIO

Judging from the industry of the bloopers Col. Roosevelt and Will Rogers at WJZ were the big attraction last night. Reception was none too good even when the bloopers let up, but WGY was much worse than WJZ.

Later the air cleared up and KYW, WOC, WHO and other DX stations were heard clearly.

But how they did bloop while Dr Cadman was going away over the time limit and both the announcer and the listeners were waiting for Col. Roosevelt.

Earlier in the evening reception from WJZ and WGY was almost perfect.

The professor who wrote a long article asserting that distortion is due to a condition that changes the wave length at regular or irregular intervals was right. Anyone with a receiving set adapted to the purpose could prove it last night. Some atmospheric condition seems to be the cause of the wave length being received in a messed up condition with either a piece chopped off or a piece added. This is not technical language but it tells what happens.

Tokyo's Bicycle Traffic

Tokyo is the one great city in the world where bicycles continue to be a favorite form of transportation. There are nearly 500,000 licensed within the municipality. Of late years many of these have acquired side cars and trailers and their presence on the main streets has become a serious problem. A census of traffic taken recently shows that between six in the morning and six at night, at some of the busiest corners, an average of 2,500 bicycles pass an hour. These are ridden mostly by young boys, messenger boys, delivery clerks, school lads and the like, who dodge in and through the other traffic at high speeds, causing many accidents.

Financial and Commercial

New York, April 23.—The rise in industrial stock prices today, though stimulated by the assurance of easy money contained in the marking down of the Federal Reserve Bank rediscount rate to 3½ per cent, was nevertheless a continuation of the forward movement which has been in progress since Wednesday morning. Professional shorts crowded the market to cover their short commitments and outside traders mustered up courage to buy stocks on the largest scale since the break in the market last month.

Several oil stocks sold at the highest prices of the year to date. Skelly's 3-point advance to 34⅜ featured this group. Independent Oil and Gas also gained 3.

A number of the motor stocks and industrials in which there was a large outstanding short interest, jumped a few points in the first hour, completing gains of about 10 points from the low of the week.

General Electric's four-for-one stock split up, with a $3 dividend, was not to the liking of the speculative district and the stock sold off about 5 points after the announcement. There was very little interest in the railroad shares, notwithstanding that important developments were expected at the meetings of directors of the Erie and Rock Island lines in New York.

Transactions reached the total of 1,550,000 shares at the end of the third hour, a contrast with last week's markets, in some of which the volume of trading fell below a million shares. Commodity markets were generally steady.

Malden, Mass., April 23.—Trying to avoid some children at play at Pearl and Malden streets, this city, today, William A. Blunt, of Malden, drove his automobile onto the sidewalk and killed Florence Scivelia, three, who was in a baby carriage being pushed by her sister, Rose, seven, who was seriously injured.

FRED STONE'S FIRST TRIUMPH WAS SWEET

Actor Has Never Forgotten That Greasy Pole.

In a series of articles in McCall's Magazine Fred Stone writes the story of his life. The following extract is his account of his first appearance before the public, in Wellington, Kan., 1822.

"About the time school closed, the year I was going to be nine, my brother Eddie and I—he was twenty months younger than I—looked over the events announced for the Fourth of July celebration and decided we were going to compete for the greased pole. From then on I practiced. Fourth of July was about three weeks away, and I guess there wasn't a telegraph pole in the town of Wellington I didn't shin up some time in those three weeks.

"My little brother didn't work so hard, he just went around telling people he was going to win the greased pole, but when the great day came he did more to contribute to my winning it than all the practicing I had been doing! I can remember just how he looked in those days, a lean, skinny youngster with bare legs, little cloth pants and a cotton shirt with a sort of snake pattern. I knew all about the snake pattern, because I had one just like it, only a couple of sizes larger.

"On the Fourth of July people came in from all around the countryside, brought their lunch and all the children, came in hayracks, and Studebaker wagons, and lined up for the day outside the schoolhouse. It was scorching hot—it always is in Kansas in July—and the pole, when they put it up, ran and dripped grease like a slide trombone. I remember the boy to draw first turn was a darkey about fifteen years old. He walked up and put his hands on the pole, looked at them, and then said, 'No, sah!' and walked away again.

"After that nobody wanted to try, till some one took a rag and wiped off the bottom of the pole about as far up as a boy could reach, to make an easier beginning. The second boy got along pretty well, but he came down all of a sudden, as boys will on a greased pole. My little brother was third. He got up to the point where the other boy left off, and then he reached in his back pocket and pulled out a handful of dirt and threw it up on the pole ahead of him.

"The referee tried to stop him, but the crowd just laughed and said, 'Let him go!' He was the youngest and smallest in the whole outfit and they were for him from the first. He didn't get all the way up, but he managed to throw dirt to the top and then he came down.

"'I think you can make it now, Fred,' he said to me, knowing my turn was next.

"There was a little American flag at the top and the boy who brought that down was due to win $5—which looked like all the money in the world, forty years ago, to a boy of nine! I think the thrill I got when I reached out and touched that flag was greater than any I've had since, not excepting my opening night on Broadway. I came down with the flag and they gave me a slip of paper, an order on the First National bank, for $5."

Time Spent in Shaving

Statistics were recently computed on the time it takes men to shave. They show that the average man who uses five minutes each day for shaving eventually loses out of his life no less than 75 days, the Pathfinder Magazine reports. Although many men can not shave in five minutes that has been allowed as the average time. Figuring on that basis men lose 30 hours a year in shaving alone. Since each shave covers an average of 48 inches of facial area a man will cut off approximately 17 square miles of whiskers in 60 years of shaving.

Predict Flood Conditions.

Low-Growing Fruits Require Protection

Burning Oil in Heaters Has Proven Satisfactory.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Burning fuel oil in lard pail heaters has proved a successful method of obtaining a rise in temperature on the cranberry bogs near the mouth of the Columbia river in Washington. Local weather bureau officials assisted in making a test of the efficiency of these heaters for the purpose. The flooding of the bogs for frost protection as is done in Wisconsin and the Atlantic coast cranberry sections is not practicable in Washington.

The heaters are set on metal tripods forced several inches into the ground so that the strong winds which sometimes blow in this district cannot overturn them. Forty ten-quart lard pail heaters were used on a half-acre plot. They were equipped one night with "soot-arrester" or "spiders," and used one night without them.

The frost on the two nights of the test caused about 15 per cent damage in a check plot 300 feet distant, not equipped with heaters. There was no damage in the test plot. Both plots were similarly situated with regard to topography and atmospheric conditions. The fuel oil burned cost 6 cents a gallon in barrel lots, and the cost of the heating was 96 cents an acre per hour with the soot-arresters in place. Without them the cost was $3 per acre per hour.

It is believed by the weather bureau men who made the test that similar good results can be secured in protecting other low-growing crops, such as strawberries, tomatoes and potatoes.

Tomato Wilts Prevented With Resistant Strains

The wilts of tomatoes, of which three forms are known, are caused by moldlike fungi or by bacteria which live in the soil and infect the plants through their roots. Wilting and yellowing leaves indicate the presence of these diseases.

Fusarium wilt, the form most widely distributed, causes the plants to wilt and die slowly, while bacterial wilt is frequently more prompt in its action. Efforts should be directed to the prevention rather than to the cure of these diseases. The planting of wilt resistant strains or varieties is advisable in order to control the Fusarium wilt. A variety of tomato known as Norton is highly resistant to Fusarium and well adapted to sections where the disease is prevalent.

Fusarium wilt should not be confused with another tomato disease prevalent in Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast regions and variously known as blight, western blight and western yellow blight. This disease and Fusarium wilt frequently occur in the same fields. The Norton tomato is resistant to the Fusarium wilt but varieties markedly resistant to western yellow blight have not yet been developed.

Spraying or Dusting to Control Harmful Worms

The tomato fruitworm, also known as the bollworm (not boll weevil) of cotton and the corn earworm, causes heavy losses of early tomatoes in the Southern states by eating into the fruit and destroying its market value, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

A large amount of damage can be prevented by either spraying or dusting the tomato fruits with an arsenical. If a spray is desirable, use two pounds of lead arsenate to fifty gallons of water or bordeaux mixture. The dust should be used at the rate of one pound of lead arsenate to five pounds of hydrated lime or one pound of paris green to twenty pounds of hydrated lime. Calcium arsenate can be used at the rate of one pound to five pounds of hydrated lime. The first spraying or dusting should be applied when the earliest tomato fruits are beginning to form or when the first worm damage is noticed and the arsenical applications should be repeated at weekly intervals for about seven weeks. All sprayed fruit should be thoroughly wiped before it is marketed or consumed.

Windbreaks to Protect the Crops and Orchard

That windbreaks are, as a whole, an asset, particularly in regions with little rainfall and where strong, drying winds are frequent, is shown by studies made by the United States Department of Agriculture. Windbreaks protect grain crops and orchards from mechanical injury by the wind, reduce evaporation of moisture from the soil, protect farm buildings from the extremes of winter and summer weather, and may also be a source of wood for farm use or sale. The ideal windbreak would have the tallest trees planted in the central rows; on either side rows of shorter trees; and outside of them, low bushes or cedars.

Strong Ewe Best Buy

The ewe to buy is the strong, healthy ewe with a straight, broad back and sound udder, sound teeth and a heavy fleece of reasonable fineness. Such an ewe when bred to a good Shropshire or Hampshire ram may be depended on to produce a good lamb. Ewes four to six years old produce the best lambs and are easier to handle, but are not worth as much money as yearlings because they are too near the end of their usefulness.

The close friendship existing between Mrs. Dora Jansen of Philadelphia, and "Jack" Kramer, alleged member of the "Candy Kid" gang, was the weapon used by the district attorney in his effort to destroy the alibi Whittemore raised to save him from the electric chair.

Rude Joke

A middle-aged bachelor, who has a wide acquaintance in the theatrical profession, was at lunch recently with an old friend, a ventriloquist, who was appearing at an Indianapolis theater. In the course of the meal, the ventriloquist invited a young woman who was appearing on the same bill, to join them. Suddenly, to the surprise of the bachelor, he heard the woman say: "Stop holding my hand." Again, on taking his leave, he was startled to hear her say: "See you after the show tonight, old scout." It did not dawn on the man that his ventriloquist friend was playing a joke on him. His friends have not been able to find out whether or not he was waiting at the stage door that night.—Indianapolis News.

Holy Land's Floriculture

Among the more prominent shrubs or small trees of Jerusalem are the olive and the almond. Other well-known flowers are the narcissus (lily of the valley in the Bible), anemone, acacia, mallow, oleander, althea (sometimes known as the rose of Sharon). The flora of Jerusalem includes over 1,000 specimens.

POULTRY

FEEDING TURKEYS IMPORTANT PHASE

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Feeding the young birds is one of the most important phases of turkey raising. Unwholesome foods and improper methods of feeding, especially in the case of turkeys closely confined, have resulted in many failures.

For the first two days after hatching the poults require no feed, access to clean drinking water and a little coarse sand and green feed to peck at being sufficient. Beginning with the third day they should be fed, the amount given them varying with the quantity of natural feed they are able to pick up outside the coop. It is best to keep them more or less hungry.

When the range provides an abundance of green feed and insects, the growing poults require but little extra feeding. More losses are attributable to overfeeding, perhaps, than to all other causes. One harmful effect of overfeeding is that it removes the necessity for hunting food, with the result that little exercise is taken and indigestion develops. Sanitary feeding places are also very important and, above all, the soil should be kept sweet and clean.

When natural feed is scarce or when the poults have to be kept from ranging outside, it is advisable to feed them about five times a day. If allowed to run outside the coop where they can find insects, seeds, and green feed, two or three feedings a day will be enough. If the poults are fed regularly every night, in a short time they will return nightly to their proper roosting quarters. Never allow the feed to become moldy. A good plan is to feed the poults on boards, cleaning off any feed that may remain after feeding, and standing the boards in the sun to dry.

Buttermilk has been found very beneficial in bringing poults successfully through the early stages. A good practice is to keep the milk in front of the young birds during the morning and water during the afternoon. If grit and green feed cannot be picked up outside the coop, they must be provided in some other way.

Loss on Bad Eggs

The United States Department of Agriculture estimates that the total loss of eggs in the United States each year due to spoilage, breakage and inefficient handling from the time the egg is produced on the farm until it reaches the consumer is $45,000,000. In the final analysis this loss is a farm loss, since a smaller price is paid for eggs to provide for the poor and broken eggs that go to the consumer.

Baby Chick Is Stupid

In addition to grain, mash and water, birds need some grit to help grind their food. Crushed stone, oyster shell or coarsely ground dry bone will serve the purpose. Such things should always be kept before the fowls in proper boxes. Since the birds have no teeth, these substances must be provided to help prepare the food for digestion.

Leghorns Economical Layers

Recent figures released by the Michigan State Poultry Improvement association, and obtained from the International Egg Laying Contest, show that the Leghorns are the most economical layers. The cost of Leghorn eggs was 14 cents per dozen; the Rocks came next with a cost of 21 cents per dozen.

Poultry Facts

Don't feed too much at a time.

More chickens are killed by feeding too soon than by starving.

Feed five times a day for first two weeks.

There are several good methods. Use one.

Keep rats, skunks, etc., away from chicks.

The cause of so many ducklings dying is the way they are fed.

Chicks must have greens, grit, grubs, grain, gumption, ground, and direct sunlight.

Keeping small sized hens is folly. There isn't any too much meat on chicken bones, anyway.

Cabbage is rich in the green material needed for laying hens. About six pounds of cabbage may be fed per 100 birds per day.

Early hatched chicks can be most easily obtained by using a reliable incubator.

Watch your layers and don't feed the slacker hen. It is always time to cull when the indications call for it.

More than 200 chicks in one brood is an expensive and harmful risk to take by anyone who has a desire to produce a lot with small equipment. As the chicks grow, give them more space. Chicks of different sizes and ages do better with their own classes.

Backed Losing Party

Active partisanship in the Bianchi, a political faction which was prominent in the Guelph-Ghibelline feuds in Tuscany at the beginning of the Thirteenth century, was the cause of Dante's banishment from Florence in 1302.

Legion Poppy Drive May 25

ROBERT G. PATERSON

New York, April 23.—"The broken men of the World War and needy veterans and their families are the sole beneficiaries of the funds derived through the poppy sales of the American Legion," declared Robert G. Paterson, chairman of the American Legion Poppy Committee, here today.

Mr. Paterson, well known in the newspaper field and associate editor of the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, has been identified with American Legion activities for a number of years and has been commander of New York county for two years.

Poppy sales for the disabled will begin May 25 and end Memorial Day. Seventy per cent is retained for local welfare work and thirty per cent is sent to state headquarters for the maintenance of the welfare department.

Red poppies, symbolic of Flanders Fields and the sacrifices made in France by the heroes of the nation are sold yearly without one cent of commissions or salaries being paid to the American Legion workers.

Mr. Paterson will be assisted by a large committee of well known men and women.

Kaffir Bread Plant in English Garden

At the time when Athelstan was on the English throne a little shoot appeared above the ground in a South African forest. Athelstan died and was followed in turn by a long line of English kings, but the little South African shoot persisted, growing in size and strength until today, having been transplanted from its native soil, it flourishes in the Royal Botanic gardens, Regent's park.

It is a specimen of the Kaffir bread plant, and gets its name from the fact that the pith of its young shoots contains starch, which is eaten by the natives in the form of bread or sago, says the London Times.

The usual height of such trees is 20 feet. This one, however, is only 10 feet and measures 15 inches round its cylindrical trunk. Long leaves with curling ends sprout from the top of the fairly smooth trunk.

Each year fresh fronds are produced, the old ones falling and leaving scars. Thus, by noting the yearly crop of leaves and counting the scars on the trunk's surface, the age of the tree has been estimated at a thousand years.

Brick Used in America When Spaniards Came

America is not without its brick antiquities, for the Spanish conquistadores found crude but excellent adobe brickwork in Peru and Mexico, and further developed it in their settlements.

In the North American colonies, which very naturally followed European, especially English, practice, the first brick houses were built of material brought from Holland or England; but in Virginia, as early as 1611, and in Massachusetts as early as 1620, the domestic industry was established. The colonial days produced fine types of brick architecture from New England to Virginia. In the Nineteenth century, however, up to about 1890, American brick building was largely confined to the use of common brick for ordinary construction or for backing stone-faced walls.

New Life for Leather

A young Scottish chemist has invented a process for regenerating leather and other substances. The product is hardly distinguishable from real leather, and is about half the price of hides.

The leather is first ground into a fine powder and any impurities removed. A small quantity of binding substance is then added, which turns it into a dough. This, together with a coloring mixture, is milled until the whole becomes a uniform mixture. It is then pressed on to a strong backing cloth.

Mary's Suggestion

The maid was leaving and her mistress said to her: "Now, Mary, I should like to give you a good reference, but my conscience compels me to state that you never got the meals ready at the proper time." Now, I wonder how I can put it in a nice way?"

"Well, mum," retorted the girl, "you can say that I got the meals the same as I got me pay."—Boston Transcript.

SMILE FOR SMILE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE CAN'T be merry all the day,
but if a friend should come your way
With smiling face and happy air,
Whatever load you have to bear,
What sort of sorrow for awhile,
I hope you give him smile for smile!

Now, much is said about the need,
Of bringing cheer to hearts that bleed
And bringing joy to souls that weep;
But there's another faith to keep,
There's something for the sad to do—
To smile at folks who smile at you!

So when they come, as come they will,
To speak of good in time of ill,
To speak of blessings, too, no doubt,
Perhaps you had forgot about,
When joy comes knocking, night or day,
Run out to meet it half the way!

Yes, there's a duty for the sad,
When good folks come to make you glad,
And that's to grin, and show your grit,
And cheer yourself a little bit.
At least this much you ought to do—
To smile at folks who smile at you.

Among the NOTABLES

LOUIS JOLLIET

TO LOUIS JOLLIET, born September 21, 1645, belongs the honor of having been the first white man to explore the upper part of the Mississippi river. Many historians claim he explored more of the river than any other man of that time, taking the honors away from both La Salle and De Soto. Beyond doubt, he was first to establish the fact that the great river did not run into the South sea, as it was believed in Canada.

Jolliet was the son of a wagon maker, better educated than most of his time, since the family had decided to make him a priest. But he turned into a fur trader and merchant, instead, and made many daring trips into unexplored wildernesses.

So great was his reputation, that he was chosen to lead the expedition that was to go down the Mississippi, Father Marquette being one of the party. Through the Illinois and Wisconsin rivers they traveled, and finally came into the Mississippi and went on to the Missouri. At this point, the Indians assured them it was but a ten days' trip to the river mouth, so they concluded the great stream ran into the Gulf of Mexico and turned back. Crossing a lake in a canoe, all Jolliet's maps were lost, and much valuable information destroyed.

His next trip was to explore the Hudson bay region and then the coast of Labrador for seal fishing. He wanted to colonize the beautiful valley of the Mississippi, but the Canadian government gave him no encouragement. He died wealthy and honored in Canada in 1700.

"I GOT to get on my diet again," said the hotel stenographer. "I got weighed this morning."

"Why you are not fat!" exclaimed the house detective.

"Right you are, Kelly," answered the girl, "and I am not going to be. An ounce of diet is better than a pound of adipose tissue. Fat has divorced more women than Mexico. If fat doesn't put women in the cemetery it puts them on the shelf and any woman would as soon have a nice quiet grave in a cemetery as a nice quiet place on the shelf.

"It is one thing to take off fat and look like the hand of a laundress after a hard day's washing and quite another to keep the fat off and not have the skin on your face full of little wrinkles like a punctured toy balloon. I am going to keep it off and believe thou me that if you are to be popular with the men you've got to wear a svelt figure, if you know what I mean.

"The new style dresses are made for the hipless women. If she swells in the middle like a tenpin its farewell any place except a hen party where they sip tea and knock flappers.

"Stylish stouts are for fat women who are not stylish. If keeping my eye on the calories will permit me to wear a section of fireman's hose for a dress I will watch my weight like a jockey. Prize fighters, jockeys and women have to keep inside the weight limit if they hope to get engagements.

"If spending a few cents on weighing machines and having a little sense about eating will keep me in the running I shall face the starter fit as a couple of fiddles and neither one of them will be the least fiddle either.

"I am two pounds overweight and I have cut out candy and sodas till I am back where I belong."

HOWE ABOUT—

By ED HOWE

(Copyright by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

There is no question about the facts: assaults on the truth are the excuses of those who object because the truth is true. . . . I know a man who is in an asylum: actually quite a smart fellow. But the truth didn't suit him, and he complained so immoderately that it was necessary to lock him up.

I know a man who lately sold his business to a rival. He says he will in future devote his time to public service, in which he has long been interested. . . . I think the facts in the case are as follows: The man gave too much of his time to the public service, and was worsted by a rival who attended to business. In fact, he failed, and his establishment was absorbed by his rival. . . . I make the prediction that the man will in future make his living from public service work, and charge all the traffic will bear.

A honeymoon is a good deal like a man laying off to take an expensive vacation and coming back to a different job.

When men are as gentle and polite as women, I like them as well as women. . . . There is a story of an old-time man who resolved not to have women in his house: he said they had notions that annoyed him, because they were not true and natural. So he employed only men to wait on him. . . . But finally he turned the men out, and had the women back, saying they were politer in his presence, at least. . . . Women may be impolite with each other, but they are politer than men in the presence of men.

How we all complain that the world is going to the devil: that the people are idle, shiftless, unreliable. . . . And how we all fail to remember it is a personal problem: that we have habits to reform.

The grand writing men frequently refer to the splendor of the great poets. . . . They say it is to be nice: there is no such splendor.

Ever think of the worthlessness of your opinions? I mean the opinions you express in conversation.

They are worthless since there is always some one present to contravert. And if you write for print, it is worse.

Boys in Charge Of Union Service

Hi-Y Deputation Team to Conduct Union Service of Uptown Churches at Fair Street Reformed Church Sunday Night.

On Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the Fair Street Reformed Church a union service of the uptown church will be held. A union service of the downtown churches will be held May 2 in the Rondout Presbyterian Church.

Sunday's service will be in charge of the Hi-Y deputation team which has been conducting meetings in different churches throughout the county for the past two years.

The deputation team was developed by Boys' Secretary Hall of the local Y. M. C. A., to prove that the youth of today were really seeking for truth rather than existing for the extreme social life that so many were accusing them of doing, and at the same time to help the smaller churches reach through young people and inspire the young people to a more active service in the church.

The team has held over 25 services during the past two years and has received the highest praise from all sources for the splendid messages they are bringing to the young people of the community they visit.

They will be assisted at the next two services by the following young ladies, all members of the Hi-Y Auxiliary, who will act as ushers and take the offering: Natalie DeWitt, Julia Burgevin, Evelyn Way, Evelyn Hotaling, Millicent McLaughlin, Priscilla Davis, Gertrude Legg, Irene Legg.

The complete program for the service this Sunday evening is as follows:

Hymn No. 208.

The speakers of the team have selected their own subjects and developed their themes in their own way, with Mr. Palen assisting them.

The orchestra of eight pieces is under the direction of Sam Scudder, Jr., who has taken a great interest in the work of the team and has given generously of this time and energy to make it a success.

The members of the team are as follows:

Musicians: Jay Molyneaux, Emerson Davis, Conrad Schornstheimer, Fred Broadie, Ernest Leudtke, Kendall Zelliff, Clifford Secor.

Costly Bride

When Mabel Boll arrived at New York from Paris, customs officials appraised her jewels, including a 40-carat diamond ring, at $1,000,000. They were gifts from her husband, Hermando Rocha, South American millionaire, during their married life, which, she said, lasted four days.

FARM STOCK

HEAVY HORSE IS MOST PROFITABLE

Good, heavy horses are now bringing a price on the market that makes them profitable for many farmers to raise. To realize profitable prices, however, they must have weight—1,600 pounds or more—and must be of good type and conformation, sound, with good style, action and attractive appearance.

To raise good, marketable horses, two things are absolutely necessary—good breeding stock, and proper development of the colts.

There has been an increase in breeding in the last few years and there are probably more colts on the farms in the Dakota farmer empire than there have been for several years. The future value of these colts will depend in a great measure upon the way they are handled and cared for from weaning time until they go to pasture next spring. They may live if they are forced to depend upon the straw stack for feed and shelter through the winter, but a colt so treated has little chance of growing into a big, rugged, marketable horse.

It is generally conceded by horsemen that a draft colt should be at least one-half as heavy at twelve months old as he will be at maturity; and they also agree that a colt severely stunted during the first year of its life will never reach its fullest possible development. Since the matter of weight means so much in market value of the mature horse, no one who regards the profit can afford to neglect the young colt.

Growing Soy Beans in Corn for Feeding Lambs

Growing soy beans in corn for feeding lambs has an excellent future, but many corn belt feeders have not yet realized the advantages and economy of such a method.

When you realize that you can grow from 300 to 600 pounds an acre of high-class forage in your corn fields with little additional effort, equipment or expense, aside from the seed, it is apparent that the practicability of it should appeal to all.

I plant beans with an attachment on my corn planter, says a writer in the Iowa Homestead. It cost $8. They may either be drilled or checked.

To procure the best results, by utilizing all the food value of the bean plant, I always select a variety that will be matured by the time our corn is in the dough stage. The Manchu variety has proved the best for us. Where one plants a larger acreage of corn with beans, it is an excellent idea to plant a late-maturing variety also, as this gives the lambs a longer feeding period on the bean forage.

Lambs take to them readily. Occasionally some scour by eating too freely at the start, but it usually passes away in a few days, leaving no ill effects. I have found that the lambs are more subject to scours where they are turned into the fields before filling them with other food than when they are allowed gradual access to the beans. Lambs fed soy beans with corn, in the fattening process, usually have a higher degree of finish, I have found, which enhances their value.

The practice of lambing corn and soy beans means simply this—more feed and more fertility. One may readily see that by adding nitrogen to the soil along with the lamb droppings the physical condition of the land is improved.

Methods of Feeding Are Highly Important to Sow

"The number of pigs saved per litter is the largest factor in determining whether or not a brood sow will be profitable," says E. F. Ferrin of the animal husbandry division at University farm at St. Paul, Minn. "Good farrowing conditions call for clean quarters, reasonably warm, with direct sunshine if possible. Either a central hog barn of moderate cost or small movable hog cots can be used to best advantage. Straw piles, loose tumbledown sheds or fence corners used for farrowing places are sure to cause heavy losses of small pigs."

Methods of feeding brood sows are highly important just at this time. Mr. Ferrin recommends the following rations for sows weighing about 300 pounds:

1. Oats, two pounds; barley, two pounds; alfalfa hay unlimited.
2. Corn, four pounds; tankage, four-tenths of a pound.
3. Corn, three pounds; skim milk or buttermilk, five to ten pounds.
4. Corn, two pounds; barley or oats, two pounds; plus tankage, alfalfa hay or milk.

Source of Satisfaction

Colts well cared for and well grown out are a source of much satisfaction. There are few things about the farm that the young folks will take more interest in than a bunch of good, thriftily growing colts. If it is desirable to keep the boys and girls on the farm, there is nothing more important than having something they will find interesting. Handling and feeding colts so that they will grow well is also the most profitable way to raise them.

World's Oldest Hymn

The oldest Christian hymn known to one credited to Clement of Alexandria and composed probably about the year 200. Henry M. Dexter has given a free paraphrase of it in his "Shepherd of Tender Youth," which is widely used in many hymnals.
